Brand New Stock Cutters and Sleighs....

I am making a new style sleigh with a new kind of cast knee, an invention of my own. All other styles of sleighs have too large a hole through the runner, which weakens it in the center, where they always break.

My sleigh has no hole through the runner. It has the pin, but it does not extend through the runner, which makes it much stronger and better.

A CURIOUS CHIMNEY.

One in Wales Two Miles High With a Brook Running Through It.

Who ever heard of a chimney two miles high with a brook running through it? Yet such a chimney exists in connection with the copper works at Cwmavon, near Aberavon, in Glamorganshire, south Wales. This is how it came to be built:

About sixty years ago the copper smoke from those works was the plague of the neighboring countryside. It settled upon and destroyed the grass for twenty miles round, while the sulphur and arsenic in the fumes affected the heads of cattle, causing gangrene. The owners of the works tried all sorts of devices to remedy the trouble, but in vain. Finally Robert Hesketh, who was afterward a successful railway engineer in India, solved the problem.

The copper works are at the foot of a steep hill. Mr. Hesketh constructed a line, or chimney, running continuously from the base to almost a hundred feet above the summit, following the natural slope of the ground. The brick which lined it and of which it was wholly constructed was barrel shape by. A small spring gushing out near the summit of the hill was turned into the chimney and allowed to flow through almost its entire length to condense the smoke. Once a year it is swept out and about a ton of precipitated copper obtained. Its top can be seen for between forty and fifty miles.—London Answers.

BRAVE MME. ROLAND.

Her Last Request Before Her Death on the Scaffold.

Madame Roland, bore herself on her journey among the dregs of the revolution which led from the Conciergerie to the Place de la Guillotine with a grace and dignity that worked from the long train that faced that way. In those bloody days showed a sublimer indifference to its terrors. A spectator who saw her as she passed the Pont Neuf wrote of her as stand ing erect and calm in the tumbrel, her eyes sparkling, her color fresh and flushed, with a smile on her lips as she tried to cheer her companions who were more overcome by the fear of coming death.

At the foot of the scaffold she asked for pen and paper to write the strange thoughts that were rising in White, the executioner grasped her arm to assist her in mounting the steps she drew back and begged that her companion might be allowed to precede her. The custom of the guillotine allowed her, as a woman, the privilege of dying last, and she wished to spare the infirm old man a scene that would augment his fears. Renouncing her "Come, citizen," she urged him, with a smile, "you cannot deny a lady her last request."

Her wish was granted.—Editor of "Her Private Memoirs."

Paris Student Restaurants.

Student restaurants in Paris are an institution that Americans may well envy. They are run solely for the benefit of the students, although strangers are welcome. There are certain little formalities that must be observed. For instance, it is the duty of every one entering to bow to the madame and say "Bonjour, madame," or "Bonsoir, madame," according to the time of day. After one has finished the meal one says for the "addition," as the bill is called. When it is presented by the little waitress it is considered crazy proper to say, "Merci, mademoiselle." He then leaves a tip of 10 centimes, or 2 cents, and, again bowing to the madame and saying "Bonjour" or "Bonsoir," he is at liberty to leave. The highest priced article on the bill of fare is a cup of coffee, 15 cents, and this in all students' restaurants is a diminutive affair, a tiny piece of beefsteak surrounded with potatoes and a cup of very weak French coffee. It is execrable. The French do not consider coffee good unless the bean is burned to a black crisp.—Lucasville.

GOBELINS.

The Rise and Decadence of the Art of Tapestry.

Each year the problem of finding ever fresh fields for the employment of Gobelins becomes more difficult. It is the outcome of one of Adam Smith's "causes of wages," the difficulty of establishment does not in this case seem a correspondingly increasing one. Young ladies, or their parents for them, think it creditable to which of the Gobelins allotted to become wage earners at a much earlier age than if they settled down as artists of Gobelins.

Gobelins takes its name from the time of Henry IV. of France, who brought workers from Bourges, near the Pyrenees, as Henry of Navarre. His relict is dated 1607. In their infancy the series produced "Moise sauve des eaux" and "Artemise" and "La fille de Jephte." The zenith of the glory of Gobelins set under Louis XIV. This was under the direction of Colbert.

Under Louis marvel succeeded marvel, which found place in the palaces of the kings or princely dwellings, among the masterpieces were the Louis Gobelins were "Les Elements" and "Les Saisons," "L'Historie du Roi," "Les Dieux Grecs" and "Les Mois." and "L'Histoire d'Alexandre." Suddenly there was a change. The corsets no longer created, they copied pictures, and with the diffusion of pictorial copies commences the decadence of the art of tapestry.

The Wealth of Croesus.

Croesus was the king of Lydia, a state in Asia Minor, and succeeded his father about 560 B. C. His name has ever been a synonym for wealth. "Rich as Croesus" having been a proverb from his own time. But the most liberal estimates of his property, so far as we have record of it have come down to us, make it worth in our money about $100,000,000. His labors derived from gold mines near Sardis the capital of Lydia, and from the plunder of the numerous surrounding states. The kingdom of Lydia was overrun by Cyrus, the Persian conqueror, and, according to the best authorities, Croesus was taken alive, put in irons and kept in the train of Cyrus. The court of Croesus was considered one of the most splendid and elegant of magnificent times, and the ruins of the royal palace and the other magnificent buildings are still to be seen on the site of Sardis.

"DRYS" LOSE IN ALABAMA.

"Wets" Win by Big Majority, Killing Constitutional Amendment.

Every report increases the majority that the opponents of a constitutional amendment for prohibition gained in the election in Alabama Monday. The outlook now is that it will be a landslide, going to perhaps 15,000 majority against the prohibition. Not ever eight, perhaps, will be in favor. Montgomery gives a majority of 1,114 against it; Mobile over 2,600, and Jefferson 1,050.

Colbert, the home of Speaker Carmichael, and Dale, his own county, are both against it. Hurkner, the choice of Governor B. B. Comer, is way in the opposition, while the home of Weakley, the prophet of the Fuller bill, has entered hike under by overwhelming defeat of the amendment. H. S. D. Mallory, amendment candidate for Governor, seems to be the only man who has held his own, his county of Dallas evidently being with him. The local vote will be about 100,000; the majority may be as much as 15,000.

BODIES OF 168 FOUND IN THE CHERRY MINE

Dead Piled in Heaps in Lowest Level and Must Be Taken Out by Boat.

WADE IN WATER WAIST DEEP

Messages Written by Dying Victims Unearthed by Explorers—All Killed by Black Damp.

Discovery of 168 bodies in the fire-swept mine at Cherry, Ill., Wednesday afternoon brought the stricken town that its lost might return from the tomb. Down in the blackened cavern where they had struggled with death the lifeless victims were found in a previous heap. The reaper was not to be denied his toll. On the faces of the sons and fathers of the women who were waiting alone, confident that many would yet be found alive, was written the blacked chapter of the tragedy. Beside them was mute evidence of a battle with thirst, hunger and fire in which they were overwhelmed when escape seemed near. It was a story that sent the staunch hearted searchers who stumbled upon the sacred forms, they shrank from telling it to those bereft when they returned from the charred home. In the darkness of their prison the victims had fought for days—how many no one can say as yet—until human endurance was exhausted and their lives were snuffed out.

The bodies were found 500 feet from the main shaft on an elevated surface where the victims had retreated before the advancing water and fatal black damp. They had not been able to escape the latter, and had died after a struggle that may have continued for two days.

To take out the bodies a skiff was brought from the Illinois River, seven miles away, and was lowered 500 feet to the vein in which the bodies were found. It was rowed across the four feet of water in the vein to the spot where the bodies lay and they were transferred to the main shaft for removal to the surface. The rescuing party had to wade in water waist deep.

Messages to loved ones were scrawled on wood and the natural state crevices of the walls. There was evidence that the men, fully realizing the fate they were facing, worked frequently to save themselves until exhaustion overpowered them. They built a wall to protect themselves from smoke, flame and water; they constructed a fan with their tools and what other material they had at hand to keep a supply of air in their chamber, and set down, weak and sick, to await either death or rescue.

Finally, after days of waiting, they left their barricade, hoping to find some chance of escape. They reached the end of the stairway and there they fell by a doorpiece of wood. Their bodies were found in the corner in the attitude of prayer.

MINE IS SEALED UP.

Blaze Eating Way Into Main Shaft at Cherry Causes Action.

The St. Paul mine at Cherry, Ill., was sealed up Wednesday night and will not be opened again for several weeks. This action was taken when it became known that the fire could not be controlled. No attempt will be made to rescue the bodies still in the tunnels until the flames are under control. It is estimated that 204 bodies are sealed up in the mine. A large number were removed Wednesday—variously estimated at from 68 to 169—in the third vein level of the St. Paul mine. The total number of dead from the great disaster is now authoritatively placed at 252.

The danger of the fire working through the coal deposits in the second vein, and up the main shaft increased hourly. Wednesday afternoon all workers, with the exception of Captain Corrigan and his men of the Chicago fire department, were driven from the mine by the menacing fire. At great hazards Captain Corrigan and the firemen in a cage working up and down the main shaft, blocked the blaze as it broke through the walls near the cage guides. Fear was felt that the timbering in the main shaft and also at the bottom might give way without warning and entrap all rescuers in the mine at the time. Captain Corrigan discovered that the timbers in the shaft were eaten away through the coal at a depth of several feet from the face of the main shaft and the tunnels. This hidden combustion, the extent or intensity of which cannot be estimated, may also ignite a large pocket of imprisoned gases on the second level.

That none of the acid was found in Dunn's stomach is taken by the police as evidence that the acid was poured into his mouth after the unfortunate assault to create the belief that he had attempted suicide.

POSTOFFICE RECEIPTS SHOW BUSINESS GAIN

Increase of 6.31 Per Cent in the Revenues Indicates a Healthy Condition.

DECREASE IN MONEY ORDERS

A Washington Correspondent Says Postal Statistics Clearly Set Forth Country's Growth.

The postoffice returns furnish the most accurate barometer we have of the condition of business. If a man or a firm is not doing anything they do not use the mails, but when they are busy they have to buy stamps and a return is made of every one that is sold. Hence the sale of postage stamps are an index of the condition of business, and during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, the receipts from that source were $184,967,915.46, an increase of $11,582,104.44 over 1908. The second-class postage paid in money amounted to $7,555,054.76, an increase of $285,551.98. Third and fourth class postage paid in money was $14,741,745, an increase of $395,797.99, and the revenue from box rents in the postoffices throughout the country was $1,346,252.71, an increase of $112,956.16 over the previous year.

These were a falling off in various other sources of revenue, the most considerable being that from the money order business. During the last fiscal year there was a decrease of $1,000,000 in the amount of domestic money orders issued and a decrease of $12,210, or 6 per cent, in the fees received for orders issued. The revenue from this source was $1,877,625.76 for the year, a decrease of $260,120.06 from 1908.

The total revenues of the Postoffice Department for the fiscal year 1909 were $202,542,334.31, an increase from the previous year of $12,683,719.66, or 6.31 per cent—a very healthful sign of the restoration of business from the panic of 1907, which was felt even into the first and second quarters of the recent fiscal year.

The only way to explain the falling off in the money orders is on the theory that the foreign-born element in the United States had not sufficiently recovered from the hard times of 1907 and 1908 to afford sending any part of their earnings to the old folks in the countries from which they came.

During the last ten years $498,883,315 has been sent abroad in money orders, which practically the entire amount being the savings of the foreign-born population in the United States remitted to their parents and other relatives, or for investment.

The growth of the money order business is indicated more accurately by the postal statistics of one hundred years ago for comparison, although there has been a decided falling off in the total sum. In the year 1816 the total money order business amounted to $1,000,000, and the total fees received for issuing the orders, $6,000. The total money order business for the year 1909 was $1,000,000, and the total fees received for issuing the orders, $1,877,625.76.

THREE GET FEDERAL POSTS.

Taft Names James L. Davenport Pension Chief, Successing Warner.

President Taft on Wednesday announced three appointments of national importance. James L. Davenport, First Deputy Commissioner of Pensions, was selected for Pension Commissioner to succeed Vespasian Warner; Benjamin S. Cable, of Chicago, was made Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Labor, to succeed Oswald Mellarg, and Chief Justice W. J. Mills, of the New Mexico Supreme Court, was named for Governor of that Territory.

Mr. Davenport, chosen for the pension post, is from New Hampshire and has occupied the position of Deputy Commissioner for twelve years. He is a veteran of the late war, enlisting the service in 1864, when he left his home in New Hampshire and went to Wisconsin, where he enlisted in Company B of the Fortieth Wisconsin Regiment. He served in that organization until September of that year, when he was discharged by the Fourteenth Wisconsin, but was compelled to return home by sickness. For a short time after the war Mr. Davenport was a store clerk, and then for twelve years was a traveling salesman. In 1881 he went to Washington and entered the pension office, where he has remained ever since. The new Commissioner is a Republican in politics. He is 64 years of age.

HEIR CAUGHT AS BURGLAR.

Walla Walla, Wash., Boy Confesses Robberies—Watch Gave Clew.

Looting thirteen business houses of Walla Walla, Wash., within twenty days of goods valued approximately at $2,000 was brought to an end the other day with the arrest and confession of Frank Staal, 17 years old, son of a widow. Staal is in custody, his mother having refused to furnish bail. His arrest followed the finding of his watch and fob on the floor of one of the stores in question. The watch and fob belonged to Staal and was caught robbing a hardware store. Reading the initials on the watch, the boy says, first put the idea of becoming a burglar into his mind. "I did not want the things I stole, but it was exciting," he said. Staal will receive $12,000 from his grandmother's estate upon reaching his majority.

FORTY SHOT TO DEATH.

Steamer from Central America Reports Cotubas Citizens Slaughtered.

The steamer City of Para, which arrived at San Francisco Wednesday from Central American ports, brought a report that forty citizens of Corinto were shot to death recently by order of President Zelaya for having expressed joy at the news of the insurgent victory. The town of Corinto was under a heavy guard while the steamer was there and the passengers made no attempt to go ashore.

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of Chicago trade, says:

"Thanksgiving trade in the leading retail lines responded amply to expectations and sustained progress in business generally is evidenced by further gains in solvent payments through the banks and decreased ratio in trading defaults. Industrial conditions disclose no cessation in the extent and variety of new demands, while in most branches of heavy production activity steadily extends.

Contracts include fair tonnages of pig iron and substantial quantities of rails, cars, power and equipment, machinery and hardware.

Chicago railroad earnings maintain notable gross gains over those of a year ago. Ship building is struggling to meet additional orders and the iron, brass, electric and furniture shops produce more extensively to meet urgent requirements.

Prices of the principal materials for factory consumption remain quite firm, while various finished products soon may be marked up. Lumber demand reflects a broader absorption of both hard and soft woods. Hides, leather and wool continue in good demand.

Agriculturists are reaping very profitable returns, and now buy liberally of necessaries, machinery, vehicles and materials for farm improvements. Interior dealers find their stocks of general merchandise under rapid depletion. Prompt replenishment is noted in seasonable lines.

Money remains in good general request by the manufacturing and mercantile classes, sales of local securities largely exceed those at this time last year and further gains appear in the filing of permits and realty sales.

Bank clearings, $231,056,144, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 3.2 per cent and compare with $158,781,816 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number twenty-three, against twenty-seven last week, twenty-six in 1908 and twenty-three in 1907. With liabilities over $5,000 number seven, against six last week, five in 1908 and thirteen in 1907.

NEW YORK.

Cold weather and the approach of the holiday season have continued to stimulate retail trade and measurably improve re-assorting trade with jobbers. In wholesale trade there are, however, some intimations of cross currents tending to restrict fullest activities.

Industrial reports are generally of large, in some cases record, outputs and offices generally report more undiminished activity in buying is noted in finished products.

MANY MORE SUICIDES

Sure Signs of Mental and Physical Break-Down Cause Alarm.

There is an alarming increase in the number of suicides in this country. The rate per hundred thousand in 1909 was the highest known, being 21.8, against the 18.8 of 1907. This figure is a gain of more than one point over the exceptionally high rate in 1904 of 20.7. The census of 1910, correcting estimates of population, may show the actual rate to be higher than the apparent rate. From every point of view, moral, social and economic, the increase in the suicide rate is one of the most alarming and suggestive phenomena of the present day.

Tables of the rate in 65 cities show that suicides are more frequent in the larger than in the smaller ones. The increase is also greatest in western and southern than in north Atlantic and north central cities.

The analysis of causes of individual cases of suicide reveals that the increase of suicidal tendency affects particularly the prosperous and better educated classes. It is the population more than it does the unfortunate, ignorant, vicious, that supplies victims of crime and suicide, particularly in the cities among the wealthy is on the rise.

More grave than these cases of worry and fear of poverty have self-inflicted death to escape punishment are the sure signs of mental and physical breakdown. Suicides have been found, especially of those who have come to the front in this country. The opportunities in the city for excitement and temptation are more numerous than material, moral and spiritual discretion.

To Cure Hereditary Crime.

Judge Rosalsky, of the Criminal New York City Court of General Sessions, in a recent address before the Bar Association of Indianapolis criminality, proposes a certain remedy for the evil, which is set forth in a leading article for the November Pearson's. After pointing out that one-half of the total of 4,500 criminals 38 per cent had drunken parents, while nearly half were affected with some form of mental disease, Judge Rosalsky proposes that the criminal tendencies are transmitted by heredity, and that it is well established that criminals "ought not to be allowed to propagate their species." The cure which he proposes is the surgical operation known as "castration," which, he says, is painlessly performed in a few minutes under cocaine by a skilled and an inch long, entailing no wound, infection or confinement in bed. Thus, he adds, "a method of sterilizing the criminal with no hospitalization is feasible." This operation has been legalized in Indiana since 1907 and more than 300 persons have been thus castrated, after their condition had been pronounced incurable.

New Railroad Safety Device.

The Erie Railroad is investigating a new electrical contrivance which includes a telephone arrangement by which a train would be in constant touch with stations and other trains ahead. The apparatus consists of a connecting with a third rail and instrument on the locomotive enabling the train to stop automatically the moment it should come within a dangerous distance. A peak button in every station would be provided for use in case of fire, or other emergencies, upon telegraphing the station operator the trouble and receiving orders. Frederick Lewis, in the Independent, says that this device proved Rear Admiral Cross in Harper.

WARNING ABOUT LAND SCHEMES

Secretary Wilson Gives Attention to Defrauding of Buyers.

Scheme to defraud the farmer and the would-be farmer—the city hoax attracted to the country by various lures—are receiving the attention of the Department of Agriculture, and it is probable that in his annual report Secretary Wilson will give warning to the prospective buyer.

Tracts of alleged rare and left after the cutting of pine trees are advertised as farming lands of the best kind; undrained swamps are described as priceless possessions, and indiscriminate sale of all varieties are held out to attract purchasers, the secretary says. A favorite device is to set thousands of slips or cuttings of fruit trees on common range lands incapable of producing anything better than wiry grass, and another is to offer to the unwary seeds or bulbs of a remarkable hybrid plant that will produce than dollars of dollars at a cent.

The real nature of these lands, agricultural department officials say, might be ascertained easily through inquiry of the State authorities.

100 Miles an Hour Flight.

Flying at an average of 100 miles an hour, Lieutenant Lahmann, in his monoplane, made a flight from Chalons to Paris, at times going with the wind and crossing with a speed of about 150 miles an hour. Orville Wright, the aviator, who is with the Wright Company, was interviewed in Paris on the subject of the recent fatal accidents to aviators in the flight made by Count Lambert, with Paris and the Eiffel Tower. Wright said that flying over cities would have to be regulated by the government and the danger to the crowds below. He said that he and his brother would soon build a machine that would soon build records for speed, and that he would do it to prove that they were not "dangerous, but he did not think it necessary to offer a prize for speed, while for crossing the ocean. Flying should never supersede the mass of locomotion, because it is too expensive and too dangerous.

Our Exhibit at Chicago.

To the Editor:

The United States Land and Irrigation Exposition at Chicago, which opened Saturday, Nov. 20th, was one of the grandest displays of fruit, vegetables and cereals, ever held in the United States. Every state west of the Mississippi River, and the territories of New Mexico and Arizona were represented, and showing the products of the irrigated lands. The great railways of the west had substantial exhibits and irrigation canals on exhibition, showing the section of territory through which they pass, the beautiful fruit and fine vegetables that are grown on irrigated lands. The fruit, I should judge, is of a very tender variety, as they shipped them to Chicago, packed in cotton, and in the most conspicuous places you would see the sign "Hands off" or "Please do not handle the fruit." These apples were highly polished and had the appearance of being dressed for the occasion, and attracted the attention of the fifteen or twenty thousand people who visited the coliseum daily. These people were not from Chicago only, but from most of the states in the union.

In the northwest corner of the building, occupying fourteen hundred square feet of floor space, was the exhibit of the West Michigan Development Bureau, with five hundred bushels of choice Michigan apples, nine large pillars of red apples, three on either side and three down the center of the booth, inclosed in white enameled wire netting, with the word Michigan in green apples running perpendicular in each pillar, and a most elegant display of straw-berries, currants, cherries and other perishable fruit, in large glass jars, on either side of the booth were hung very large bunches of most elegant grapes, just across the isle, four young ladies were constantly serving the public with Michigan's delicious fruit, in addition to all this, was a very creditable display of corn, oats, peas, beans and potatoes, all artistically arranged. This the West Michigan Development Bureau, has proven to the public at large, that no state in the union excells Michigan in fruit and vegetables and, no state affords a more favorable opportunity to the industrious young man, than western Michigan, was fully demonstrated at Chicago. No display in the coliseum attracted so much attention, as the one from Western Michigan. That the people were deeply interested, was proven by the hundreds, if not thousands, who wanted information relative to the climate, soil, price of land and the shipping facilities of Western Michigan. "I never saw such fruit" "What a splendid exhibit of fruit." "I did not know that Michigan produced such elegant fruit." "You must go to Western Michigan, instead of the west." "Why Michigan must be next to Cork State, in the production of fruit." These are some of the exclamations that were made by the people as they first looked upon the display from Western Michigan.

The photographs taken, and on exhibition, of our rural homes, fields and orchards, played no small part in convincing the people that Northwestern Michigan is not in the Nicholls. We have pictures beyond any doubt, that the Western Michigan fruit belt is more wonderful than any thing in the west, and that we have the advantage over the west, not only in the flavor of fruit, but in markets and freight rates. The exhibition at Chicago was a grand success, and it will be instrumental in locating home seekers on our lands, and that it will enhance the price of land, there can be no doubt.

Michigan has done herself proud.

Marine Notes.

The tug J. V. Taylor laid up Friday.

The steamer Cummings, of the Boyne City run, laid up last Thursday.

The tug Margaret McCann, of St. James, is hooked for Washburn's slab yard some time this week for minor repairs.

The steamship Missouri was in yesterday (Wednesday) morning, from Chicago, returning south from here. This is her last trip.

The U. S. revenue cutter came into port for shelter Tuesday noon, remaining here the remainder of the day. She was bound for Milwaukee.

The big Booth fishing tug W. G. Harrow arrived here last week from Bayfield, Wis. After being fitted out with a "rig" she will next week proceed to Waukegan, Ill, for winter fishing.

Another old timer has gone. The large Badger State burned to the waters edge in St. Clair river Monday. The Badger State was one of the W. T. Co. line of passenger steamers that wooded at Charlevoix in the '70s.

The lighthouse tender Sumac left here early Sunday morning to pick up the straits lightships and put them in winter mooring at Cheboygan. She evidently succeeded before the gale, as boats entering from below Sunday reported them gone from stations.

There was considerable marine activity at this port Sunday afternoon, at about the beginning of the 45-mile northwester that prevailed for twenty-four hours. The steamer Three Rivers came in from Chicago, and on her heels came the steamboarge Myers from below. The captains of the steamboarge Wayne and her consort, the Arthur, say they had their stacks for low water in the upper channel. They came down hunting for lees from Boyne city to Tonawanda intending to proceed to Lake Michigan, but they also, in the upper bridge draw for anchorage, and when they got off the gale was on and they tied up at the dock, where they remained all day Monday.

Osborn's Strength at Home.

In an impartial and essential particular Chas. S. Osborn's candidacy for the governorship is exceptional and unique among the quartette of gubernatorial ambitions now on exhibition in Michigan, says the Sun News. This distinctive quality of the Osborn candidacy is found in the solidarity and unanimity of his support among the republicans of his own district. Indeed Michigan politics has never furnished a situation at all comparable in this respect with the one which has developed as a result of the Osborn announcement. This unanimous sentiment is well illustrated by the expressions of the upper peninsula delegation to the state legislature and similar expressions from the editors of the Twelfth district, whose support of Osborn is not only unanimous, but intensely vital and enthusiastic. If the regard in which a candidate is held by his home folks is any criterion of his availability for public office, then no candidate in the governorship race can approach the upper peninsula entry.

The condition of affairs in the Twelfth district shows in sharp contrast with the conditions surrounding the other candidates. In the Fifth district, Muskegon and Montcalm are necessarily divide local sentiment, since in Kent, Montgomery is described as a local candidate, while in the Sixth district Kelly and Montgomery similarly split the strength of the district, as Ingham county friends of Montgomery also claim him as a local candidate. In neither district is the newspaper support so all unanimous for any one of the three candidates.

Circuit Court.

The November term of court, just about closing, has been one of the longest on record—ten days.

Considerable interest was centered on the case of Rupert vs. the Boyne City Tanning Co., in which Rupert sues for the loss of an arm while in the employ of the tannery. The jury brought in a verdict of $5,000 damages for plaintiff. Nicholas & Nicholas appeared for plaintiff and Harris & Ringsnagger and Knowles & Converse for defendants.

Full citizenship was granted Richard Walker and Richard S. Shapton, but Salem Joseph must wait again, to the court said.

The people vs. H. E. Pearsal, violation the liquor law, dismissed.

Wm. Knopp, accused of taking indecent liberties, was let go with a prohibitory sizling tied to him.

The liquor law cases against Boswell Brock, Heinrich, Andrews and Garland were continued.

The 2 edge was good to Grant Nelson, charged with forgery, and equally considerate with Guy McCain, up on a charge of embezzlement. Both got probation. Ben Williams, also up on a forgery count, will run loose as long as the Judge thinks it proper.

The case against Cullen, who is charged with soliciting a bribe, was continued, and the accused admitted to bail, Midland parties signing the bonds.

Alex. Collect, charged with violation of liquor law, plead guilty and was let out on probation on the payment of $25 costs.

The replevin suit of Alexander Brown vs. Peter Weishuhn resulted in the Judge instructing the jury to render a verdict for plaintiff.

The assumpsit case of LaBrecks vs. Frank Anderson was settled out of court.

The case of Nicholls and Morgan against the Boyne City Lumber Co., and that of the same parties against W. H. White & Co., were continued.

Decrees of divorce were granted in the petitions of Martin vs. Martin, Lamway vs. Lamway, Bassett vs. Bassett, Petoskey vs. Petoskey, and Quinlett vs. Quinlett.

Local News.

—C. H. Ferguson went to Grand Rapids yesterday.

—Something about holiday goods in Fischer's new ad this week.

—H. N. Faulkner and wife will return to their Chicago home Friday.

—Mrs. H. A. Carr, of East Jordan, spent Sunday with Charlevoix friends.

—Capt. John Genset left Friday for Chicago to attend the funeral of a sister.

—Traverse City is again stirring up the proposition to build electric roads up both peninsulas.

—P. S. Brown has been engaged as fireman at the VanPelt heating plant and the Carnegie library.

—Col. D. C. Wickham is in town this week on business in connection with improvements at the life saving station.

—The fire department was called out Thursday to quench another chimney fire. This time it was at the residence of Peter Tysver, on the south terrace.

—John A. Lynn left Friday for New York to resume work on his big rattle summer garden contract. He took Sam Hamilton and Willie Graves with him.

—W. D. Palmer and wife left Tuesday for their home in Minneapolis Miss Tony and Clarabell Chalouska accompanied them and will remain for the winter.

—Capt. Kent, of the life saving station, is finishing up a house on the plat recently platted south of the city, and will erect another one in the spring. Both will be rented, or sold to members of the crew.

—The types will occasionally make a monkey of the editor. In our editorial welcome to the fishermen last week we wrote "menace to life and property" whereas the types made it say "life and poverty." Of course the proof reader is the culprit, and the proof reader is the editor.

—The Michigan Turpentine Co., which is completing a fine plant in Bay City, is receiving pine stumps from the north by rail. A car holds 10 cords, and a large supply will be secured to assure a continuous run when the factory starts in January. The purchase of these stumps means the clearing of many thousands of acres of land, with a double benefit to the owners—money and cleared land.

—A very pleasant gathering took place at the home of Mrs. A. Stewart on Mason street last Tuesday, it being the anniversary of her birthday. A large number of friends gathered to celebrate the event. A very sumptuous dinner was served and many congratulations extended to this estimable lady and, departing, her friends wished her many happy returns of the day. The SENTINEL adds its good wishes.

—The county road institute for the counties of Charlevoix and Emmet will be held in connection with the farmer's institute at Petoskey, Michigan, on Dec. 17, 1909. A representative from the state highway department and other speakers, if practicable, will be in attendance to render any assistance possible to those interested in road building. County road commissioners and township highway commissioners are entitled, under provisions of section 3, Chapter V, Act 283, Laws of 1905, to per diem and expenses for this day as for one spent in actual road work.

—C. S. Dodge and wife left for Chicago Friday to spend the holidays with friends.

—F. N. Chapel & Co., in their new ad this week, tell about desirable holiday goods.

—If you are looking for something nice for a Christmas present read S. M. See & Sons' new ad.

—Several more rooms are to be finished up at the county farm house, to meet the necessities of increased patronage."

—Mrs. A. D. Cruikshank left Tuesday to spend the winter with her daughter in Idaho, stopping off at Pueblo, Colo., a short time to visit friends.

—The Michigan Central and Pere Marquette have granted higher wages to trainmen and telegraphers, thus forestalling any strike talk on these roads.

—Mrs. McClary wife of Mr. McClary of the Kalamazoo Furnishing and Tailoring Co., of this city, was called to Lansing last Thursday by the death of a brother.

—Dr. Lucy E. Bon, formerly of Minneapolis, Minn., is now established at 106 Park avenue, in our city. Dr. Bon is of the chiropractic school and has had marked success in treating acute and chronic diseases of various kinds.

—Mrs. Susan McNally died at her home in Hayes last Thursday morning at the advanced age of 84 years. Deceased was the mother of Peter, George and Wm. McNally, and of Mrs. Ed. Hacet. The funeral was from the home last Saturday, Rev. Anastatius Hinder officiating. Mrs. McNally was left a widow seventeen years ago.

—All indications point to unprecedent business activity in Charlevoix the coming year, beginning with the opening of navigation. Work on the big cement plant will begin as soon as the ground thaws out, and resort building and other operations already mapped out promises to be greater than in any previous year. The dinner pail is booming up big on the horizon. Even now mechanics are all busy.

—Forming a human chain, workmen aboard a scow belonging to the Columbia Construction company of Muskegon, engaged in building government dockage at St. Joseph, saved Ernest Beauvais, a fellow workman, from death by drowning. Chained to the bone from the icy bath, Beauvais had already sank once and was going down the second time when a dozen comrades clasped each others hands and reached him. Beauvais is well known in Charlevoix.

—The C. H. & I. railroad is planning to start an experimental forestry farm at some point along its line to see if it can solve the problem that is now looming up large before all the railroads of the country. Nothing has as yet been found that will prove a successful substitute for wood ties, and it is the supposition that the roads will have to provide some means of supplying this need for the future. It is probable that the experiment will be made with trees on the black locust variety.

—Now candidly, friend, don't you think you have more money to spend for Christmas gifts this year than you did last? And don't you feel better for having voted for local option? If you did not vote for it, knowing what you now know and seeing what you now see, don't you regret that you did not put yourself right with your conscience by voting affirmatively? There is whiskey in town, you say. Of course there is, and it is being licked up too; but the open saloons are gone, and they were the big bait-end of the evil. The "survivors" has nothing to say about the individual right to indulge—that is a matter of conscience. But Christmas will certainly be merrier in a decenter way by reason of the new order of things.

—J. L. Crane's new ad this week contains important holiday information.

—During the snow storm Sunday the Cat Head fog signal could be distinctly heard here.

—A nice pair of shoes make a fine Christmas gift. Frazier's ad tells you about it.

—Cadillac has six big saw mills and their cut for November was 8,000,000 feet of lumber.

—Mrs. Era Gee left last Friday for a two weeks visit with friends and relatives at Alba, Boyne City and other points.

—C. L. Gonser and wife left Tuesday for Mr. Gonser's old home, Ashley, Ind., to spend Christmas. He will bring his mother back with him to remain this winter.

—The closed season for commercial fishing closed Wednesday of this week, and fishing is wide open again all along the line, and will continue until the ice closes up business. There is little doubt that operations will continue through January.

—J. O. Hauk is still on South Fox Island hunting his shins and gazing anxiously towark Charlevoix the Beautiful for a tug. The Pyfiure Olaf went after him last Thursday but could not make a landing. The fishing tugs and gasoline boats are now out, and one of them will bring him in soon.

—The steamer Beaver will only make irregular December trips this winter. It has been arranged with the St. James tug Margaret McCann to carry the mail as long as the lake is clear of ice. The Margaret is a strong seaworthy craft, and will give good service until the Cross Village ice bridge is formed, which will probably not be until some time in February.

—If a preacher or a teacher stumbles there are those in every community who will throw a brick at him to make the fall certain, just because he is a preacher or a teacher. The "I am holier than thou" sort of people are generally the ones that will bear the most watching. Pilate said, "I find no fault in this man," yet the rabble cried, "Crucify Him!" And there were doubtless Pharisees in that mob. "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone."

—A. W. Hartwell, an Atwood farmer, says that in his section of Antrim county many new orchards will be planted the coming spring, as a result of good profits on apples this year and the showing made in Chicago by the Development Bureau. This is also true all over Northern Michigan. John McCann, of St. James, who was here last week, says that orders for these kinds of trees have been given by the Island farmers and that the fruit fever is rapidly spreading at "the Beavers."

—Traverse City is given over to the Grangers Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of this week, and it is one of largest as well as one of the most important meetings ever held in Northern Michigan. Charlevoix county is there in large force, and the delegation is making itself felt. The Traverse City Record says of the fruit exhibit. "When apples that have been packed and shipped twice and have stood for 10 days in a hot building and have been handled by innumerable fingers still look firm and make a fine showing as a station fruit and line apples to eat, it speaks well for the solidity of the goods they are made of. Such are the apples on display in Central Labor hall adjoining the City opera house where the grangers are holding an exhibit in connection with the state meeting, the exhibit being some of the same that were displayed at the big show in Chicago by the Western Michigan Development Bureau. The apples, 150 boxes in all, were selected by George E. Howe, general manager of the Western Michigan bureau, whose untiring energy and expert knowledge of fruit and his great executive ability made the big show in Chicago a lasting memorial to Western Michigan."

Marine Notes.

The steamer Leo A. Cummings will haul out this week for the winter and receive minor repairs.

The St. James tug Margaret McCann came over Friday for repairs to her stern bearings, remaining here over Sunday.

Winter navigation has its drawbacks, and a somewhat debilitating effect on summer profits. The steamer Beaver missed her regular Monday trip last week on account of bad weather, but made the rids to the Island Tuesday. She remained there until Friday morning storm-bound. She made a good round trip Saturday.

This week marks the wind-up of cargo carrying navigation. The steamer Wilson left for Muskegon Friday lumber laden, and the big steambarge Myers left Tuesday for Tonawanda with nearly a million feet of Boyne City lumber. The steamer Three Brothers also took out a Chicago cargo Friday.

THE NEW POSTOFFICE

The Finest in the North—VanPelt Block the Pride of City.

Probably by the time this paper goes to press again the Charlevoix postoffice will have been removed to its new quarters in the VanPelt block.

The transfer deserves more than passing notice, inasmuch as it celebrates the completion of the highest class structure ever yet erected in Charlevoix.

In depth, the building is but very little larger than the room formerly housing the postoffice, but the width is two feet greater. Very much more room, however, is gained both for the public and the office force, by the occupying of the basement for the R. F. D. work, to which the mail is sent from the distributing table through chutes.

Beside the necessary enlargement of the splendid polished oak panel work that confronts the office, and a large increase of lock-boxes and drawers, the office has been supplied with new inside working conveniences including distributing tables, etc. Three large windows on the alley side give ample light.

But the public lobby is what will start every citizen of Charlevoix into a bragging spasm. Entrance is gained by a large door on the alley corner, and through the stairway hall on the north side. The floor is of tile, laid in octagonal sections, and bordered with a foot of the same material in artistic design.

A heavy brass railing fronts the main delivery window, to prevent congestion, while another railing of the same design adorns the window front. The crowning feature of the lobby is the wainscotting, which is of imported Italian marble, five feet in height, above which the walls are calcimined in a harmonious tint. We make the statement without a fear of contradiction, that Charlevoix has the finest postoffice between Grand Rapids and the straits, barring the government building at Traverse City.

The building itself embraces every feature of first class architectural and constructive work. Forrest L. Bartholomew was the designer and Fred H. Thomas superintended the work of construction. The building is of solid concrete foundation, the superstructure being of cream colored brick. The front, however, is what gives the building architectural character. It is heavily embellished with green terra-cotta of pleasing design. The large, deep windows have full size heavy plate glass on front and sides, while below the window, around the entire area, is a two foot section of primsatic glass, leaded in five inch squares, which lights the basement by the aid of a prismatic reflector below on the inside. This is supposed to be the first foot section of prismatic pavement between the building and the cement sidewalk.

The second story, which is reached by a wide stairway on the north side, is devoted to office rooms, part of them en-suite. The finish corresponds with the entrance wood work below—heavy polished oak. The two closets, which are supplied with every necessary modern convenience have tiled floors and wainscoting.

Everything about the building is distinctly high grade. Nothing has been overlooked that was necessary in a public structure of its kind, and the artistic in architecture has been kept well in mind by the builder and architect.

It is credit to Charlevoix, an honor to Mr. VanPelt, and a big asset for the young architect,—Forrest L. Bartholomew.

Members Board of Commerce—Attention!

The regular annual meeting, called for Dec. 6th, was adjourned to Thursday evening, Dec. 16th, there not being a quorum present at the regular meeting.

Besides the reports of the officers for the past year, a new Board of Directors and new officers are to be chosen for the ensuing year. It is hoped that all stockholders will make special efforts to be present at the adjourned meeting.

WILL E. HAMPTON, Secretary.

FOR SALE—Cement block machine. New. Made blocks for two houses. Will trade. Any farm produce. A. A. KENT, Life Saving Station.

THE CEMENT PLANT

THE STANDARD CEMENT COMPANY AGAIN AT THE FRONT AND STRONGER THAN EVER.

One Million Dollars Capital Stock—Will Build $700,000 Plant Here.

The Detroit News of Dec. 8th publishes the following:

"Assistant Prosecuting Attorney Fred A. Aldrich has been elected president of the Standard Cement & Lime Co., which incorporated at Lansing yesterday with a capital stock of $1,000,000, one half of which was said to have been already raised. Henry E. Hunt, of Coldwater, Mich., was elected vice president, while E. L. Buell, of Detroit, was named secretary and treasurer. Hunt and Buell are the principal stockholders.

"The main offices of the company are in the Ford building, but the plant is to be at Charlevoix, where the company has 1,000 acres of quarry property which, with the shale which is also found there, form the two principal constituents of the cement which will be manufactured.

"It is expected a $700,000 plant will be completed by Sept. 1, 1910, and about 100 men will be employed. The site of the plant has frontage on Lake Michigan, and the company will erect a 500-foot dock bordering on 24 feet of water. The principal shipment will be to the northwest through Milwaukee and Duluth, as there are no cement plants in Wisconsin, Minnesota and North Dakota.

"Willis Soper, of Detroit, is the engineer in charge of the erection of the plant."

This will be good news to Charlevoix people. The Standard Portland Cement Co. has been in existence more than three years, and began operations two years ago by erecting two modern lime kilns on their property.

A railroad line was laid out to the quarry and kilns from their Pine Lake frontage and the road bed graded, when the financial stringency put a stop to further operations. There were good reasons for believing that the company had a good grip on the future, with immense natural resources at its command, and that if it were on the inside here, it has been known that work was being done that would sooner or later result in the carrying out of original plans.

The strength of the proposition rests in the fact that there is not a point anywhere in Michigan where all conditions are so favorable for a plant of this kind. The company first of all, has an inexhaustible supply of first-class cement lime rock. It has a frontage on a landlocked harbor, and the assurance of branch and sidings connecting its works with the Pere Marquette railroad, and the two latter features insuring unexcelled transportation facilities.

Augmenting present transportation facilities is the positive assurance that the Michigan Central will extend its East Jordan line to this place in the near future. Had it not been for the panic of two years ago, it would have been accomplished before this.

Comparing all these advantages with those of other cement plants in Michigan where the raw material is transported from other points, the certainty of remunerative returns for the investment here are apparent to manufacturing.

The operation of the proposed Standard plant here means increase in the population of Charlevoix and a boom for its commercial interests.

The Redemption of David Corson

By CHARLES FREDERIC GOSS

Copyright, 1900, by The Bowen-Merrill Company. All Rights Reserved.

CHAPTER XXI.

Quietly, almost furtively, as he could, David narrated the events of the past few months and in his mind he drew in short breaths or long inspirations as the story shifted from phase to phase, and when at last he had finished, she clasped her hands and gazed into the distance of the sky with tearyes that were unfathomed in tears.

"Dear dearest your old mother," Peggy is aglow at last. "Oh! How we have wronged him, now we have made him suffer. He was always kind! He was cruel, but he was kind! How could I see him? I did not, I could not. Thy heart was sodden. It had been once soaked from his kindness and I could not see clear, David. And afterwards—well I could not love him! How he should we have wronged him so!" How hum it was! How brutal! How pitiful! Lad, I blame myself—and yet I cannot wish him back. What does all this mean for us, David? Perhaps you can see for the little one? Perhaps you can see the little one? Perhaps I can see from your face and your voice that you are your old self again. Oh! If you can, lad, be kind! Be kind! Be sane, cousin! Ah, lad! Ah, lad! Thy face is changed! Thy voice is changed! Tell it that your Peggy is two years older! Tell it that your Peggy is two years wiser! Tell it that your Peggy is no longer. I am only a woman, David! I cannot bear the sorrow! I have bore two too deep! I cannot live without you.

Waiting long before he answered, as if in relief and he sure, Peggy, I said quietly but confidently, "Peggy, I know not what lies before us. I know not begin our lives over again, start anything in the world. I know not what we made that take beginning three long years ago. I know not what lies before us. We cannot, we can begin again."

"But can we make right it possible? I do not know! "How is it possible? I do not see! We are not what we were. There is a mark of ashes on our hearts. We were gay and innocent three years ago. Is it necessary to be more and innocent? And how can we be with all this fearful past behind us? We cannot become children again."

"I have thought much and deeply about it," David responded. "I know not what subtle change has taken place in me. I know not how it has been great and real. My heart was broken in the life of the old—broken by fall of despair, and now it is full of hope. I am not so innocent as I was, but I am not so hard as I heard me speak in the old Quaker meeting-house, or rather I am not innocent in the same way. My heart was then like a spring among the mountains! It had not of virgin innocence. I had sinned only in thought. I had sinned only in thought—in the thought of unholy passions of unfolding youth. It is different. I have seen a world of realities, actualized evil lies buried in the depths of my soul. It is there, but it is there only as a memory and not as a living force. There must be some way, I cannot tell how, be a portion of guilt as well as of innocence, and purpose and ideal higher and finer kind. There was a peace of mind which I had as an innocent boy, which I do not possess now; but I have another and deeper peace. There was a childish courage, but it was the courage of one who had never been exposed to danger. There is another courage in my heart now, and it is the courage of the veteran who has faced his lesson to the foe! I know not by what strange alchemy these different elements of evil can have become sanctified and incorporated into this newer and better life, but that I do know, and nothing can make me doubt it—that which I am not as good yet I am better; while I am not as pure I am purer. Yes, Peggy, I think we can be happy. We can be happy in little children. I feel myself a little child to-night, and I know, Gave me, was like an old man, bowed and crushed under a load of wretchedness and misery! God sent me to you one; life seems sweet to me. Let us be little children together. We have sinned, round a circle, and have come back to the old starting point. Let us begin again."

"Lad," she said, kissing the hands she held, "how like your old and you are to-night. You would not hope have tried my soul with joy. Is it your presence alone that has made it, or is it God's, or is it both? A change has come over the very world around us. All is the same, and yet it is different. The stars are bright or. The brook has a sweeter music. There is something of heaven in this introducing cup you have put to my lips! I seem to be in the world of a spiritual presence! Hush! Do you hear voices?"

The excitement had been too intense for this aged woman to endure with tranquillity. Her heart, her conscience, her imagination had suffered the almost unendurable strain. She flung herself into the arms of her boy and trembled upon his breast, and he held her there until she had regained her composure.

"Do you really love me yet?" she asked, as trouble, half in fear, half in gazing up into his with an expression in which the memory of affection still lingered, but was strangely blended with the unquestioning love of a child and a'ving woman.

"I love you!" he cried; "your face has been the just vision upon which I gazed when I fell into a restless sleep, and the first which greeted me—morning consciousness—when I waked from my troubled dream. My life has been but a fragment since we parted; a part of my individuality seemed to take her own away. I was a child, I felt that in other life no space could separate us forever!"

At that moment the horse which had stood patiently beside them—the old bridge, should the road, rattled his bridle and whinnied.

"Poor fellow!" I had forgotten all about him in my joy!" said David, startled at the sound, and patting his shoulder. "You have had a hard run, and are tired and hungry. I must see you to the barn and feed you. They will make you at the inside tonight but I will send you here to-morrow, or you can myself, that is if Peggy wishes it to rid of me."

"Thee is very thoughtful, but smiled at him a tender and confident smile.

"Oh! you shall never leave me again—not for a moment," she cried, tightening his arm against her heart.

He paused a moment and looked down as if a new thought had struck him.

"What is the matter?" she asked.

"Do you think they will scatter our home?" he said, with a penitence and humility that touched her deeply.

"Welcome our home!" she exclaimed. "You do not know them, lad. They talk of nothing else. They have wrought up to you in every direction. The door is never locked, and there has never been a night since your disappearance that a candle has not burned to its socket on the sill of your window; when do you think of that? You do not know them, David. They are angels of mercy and goodness. They never selfish in keeping you so long! Come to my home, lad, let us home."

Just at that instant a loud hallo was heard—Peggy, Peggy, Peggy, Peggy!

"It is Steven—the dear boy! He has missed me. You have a dangerous rival, David!"

"He said this with a merry laugh and a tender glance at her son, Steven."

"Where are you?" he called.

"I am here by the bridge!" she cried, in her clear voice.

"She is here by the bridge!" The boy cross from the other side of the bridge through the woods.

There was silence for a moment, and then there heard a joyous shout, "David! David! Uncle David! oh! mother, mother! I'm so glad David!"

There was a crushing in the bushes, and the strong form of the boy went crashing through them and swung himself into the arms extended to him, with a heart, all the love, all the devotion of the happy days of old.

CHAPTER XXII.

David's welcome home was quiet, cordial and heartfelt. The Quaker life is calm, serious seldom appear on the surface, even though they must sometimes agitate its depths. Social and friendly, but never fond of demonstrations, control, sympathy and charity are extended to the erring; humanity is a duty and an instinct; sentiment love is deep and powerful.

When David had frankly told his story, he was permitted to resume his place in the life of the old homestead, as if nothing had happened. He expressed to his brother and sister his love for Peggy, and his determination to make her his wife in the old Quaker marriage.

They assented to his plans, and at the earliest possible moment the milkmen and sisters of the little Quaker settlem of Friends were asked to meet, in a meeting-house, with Peggy Corson, to confer with him about a "concern" which was on his mind.

They came, and heard his story and his intention, told with straightforward simplicity and manliness, with a sympathy and moved in confidence, and with a tender and touching allusion to the ordeal. The date of the wedding was placed at the end of the month, which, by their ecclesiastical law, must elapse before the second and all-evening meeting was appointed for the ceremony.

In the meantime David remained quietly at home, and took up his old duties on the farm, and strengthened and had them down. Such a life as he had been leading tended to unfit him for manual labor, and sometimes he thought sadly of Annie and said he felt his spirit faint within him when the recollection of the voiling power could not affect in the slightest degree. Briefly put the chief of these causes are: (1) The lower efficiency of the average woman worker, resulting mainly from physical limitations; (2) the temporary nature of the employment, which in most cases is terminated by marriage; (3) the rapid increase of the supply of woman labor, which in recent decades has been crowding into occupations already filled by men; (4) the lack of organization, which has left women at the mercy of sweat masters; (5) the parasitic relation of many women toward their industrial occupations, which are not their sole means of support. These causes work parallel even if women had the ballot. Whenever the suffrage question or would not do for women, it would assuredly not bring her equal pay with men.

Nor would the ballot assist working women to secure better legislation protection against injurious conditions of employment. On the contrary, much of the present legislation limiting hours and regulating the terms of employment for women would be repealed unconstitutional by the proposed extension of the suffrage. This legislation, so far as it applies to adult women, now stands the test of constitutionality only because women are in the same class with minors as regards their constitutional status. If women votes given the ballot and then were placed in the same class with adult men, they would be deprived of the special protection now afforded them by the labor code. In this respect the working woman would be worse off with the ballot than she is without the boomerang "weapon."

Hope for the Victims of Narcotics.

In an article in Success Magazine Alexander Lambert, M. D., says: From time immemorial mankind has sought substances to help celebrate his joys, or soothe his sorrows, or blunt the dreadfulness of his existence. Opium and alcohol have most frequently been used for these purposes. At late years cocaine has been added to this list. Whenever these narcotics have been employed for these purposes they have often been used to excess.

When the habit of the excess—the use of narcotics has once been formed, so rare indeed have been the instances of individuals successfully freeing themselves from their enslaving habit that they have been regarded as medical curiosities. In the whole broad range of the practice of medicine there is no situation more trying to patient and physician than the struggle to obliterate the craving for narcotics and to reestablish the patient in a normal state in which he may again face honestly the problems of existence. Until recently this seemed all but impossible, but such a treatment was discovered which successfully obliterates the craving for narcotics, and perform in the patient a feeling of health and well-being. Thus, the patient is also important that he keep his experiences up to date, and be able to tell to others exactly how much he Savior did for his next yesterday, or how he was enabled to do it, and the ways of the Lord only the day before yesterday.

Thanksgiving Day with a annual recall of thought from material blessings to the Author of them all is a reminder that it is time for the whole Christian church to become vocal once again with the "new song" of joy, hopefulness and helpfulness. Another year has passed for Christ's cause, and if the year has been lived in the shadow of God's presence it has been for better—and now a full volume of hearty praise, precisely attuned to the peculiar experiences of the past twelvemonth, should rise to God. "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto Thy name, O Most High!" "Praise the Lord, O my soul!" Scripture passages such as these accentuate the spirit of thankfulness of Thanksgiving, the proper spirit for praise. It is indeed a sordid nature that never acknowledges the hand of God in all its good. Even the Birds look up in thankfulness when they drink of the water, and the flowers, when the sunshine of heaven reaches them, seem to recognize the goodness of their Maker. It is only man who is unthinking and unthankful. It is to be said of us that we have received everything and are grateful for nothing. It is now the time to be heartily thankful and to "sing unto the Lord a new song."

SINGING A NEW SONG.

By Rev. C. A. S. Dwight.

Sing unto the Lord a new song, and praise Him from the end of the earth. Isa. 42:10.

Music has in every age been recognized as a natural and ready instrument for the expression of human emotions, whether of joy or sorrow. It is difficult to find anywhere a people so primitive as not to possess at least the rudiments of a musical sense and some kind of rude musical instruments. When the savage cannot chant, he will at least utter notes in cadence, and where he has not the skill necessary to linger a large, he will beat a tom-tom. The best and most perfect music is though all of human life, music is the groundswell of existence.

Sorrow has its music, as it likewise joy. The dirge is as old as the paean. Of all men on earth, the Celts have perhaps been most given to elegiac and indulge in lamentations, and the most common to sing and chant with an abandon which is in the best sense pleasing because it is legal assert of his being and with reference to an important phase of his existence, in the Man with a Song. It is in just as true that the song which a sincere and progressive Christian sings is not always the same tune. Sing unto the Lord a new song! was the exhortation of a psalmist who knew some good songs of the kind that live and stir the hearts of men for all time, and who had sung many who lived before or since. With the experience of every one who sings with the dawning of every new day, there is added reason to praise the Lord for His benefits in new mercies, mercies are fresh every morning and renew every evening. The manna which God gave the Israelites of old was a perpetually renewed feast. It was fresh food for each succeeding day. The Lord does not feed His people on last week's bread. The mercies we have variety and spice. No one day of life is exactly like any other day; no experience of joy or sorrow is precisely the counterpart of that of any other day. Hence, the variety of life, and its interest. Life is full of inspiring motive for worship, for new adaptations of the old music of thanksgiving.

It is to be feared, however, that many Christian men forget that their Christian experience should be a new song and that new occasions call for fresh exercise of the powers of thanksgiving. There are men who testify mainly to what the Lord has done for their souls. Their testimony is in the past tense, which is to be expected, for it is only at the end of life that we can yet received, unless he be a prophet, but the trouble is that the testimony is in the past preterite. No man can live wholly on the memory of the past. It is to be feared that he should recall with gratitude the great mercies of his salvation, but it is also important that he keep his experiences up to date, and be able to tell to others exactly how much the Savior did for his next yesterday, or how he was enabled to do it, and the ways of the Lord only the day before yesterday.

FIRE WIPES OUT SHERMAN.

Only Two Business Houses Left—Loss Exceeds $40,000.

Fire for the second time in five months, believes to have been of incendiary origin, practically wiped from the business section of the town of Sherman, early on a recent morning. Only two business houses left in the place. The town's fire engine did not work, and was practically useless. The total loss is estimated at more than $40,000, with comparatively small insurance. The fire started in the rear of A. E. Aldrich's hardware store, and the flames spread in both directions. The losses are: A. E. Aldrich, hardware stock, $10,000, partly insured; George Tee, meat market, $4,100, small insurance; M. Potter, barber chair, $100. Insurance: Tuscola County's exchange, $500, partly insured; Knights of Pythias building and contents, $1,200; Masonic hall in same building, $200 on equipment; Mrs. A. Lyle, general store, $7,000, insurance $4,000; H. C. Gandell, drugs, $3,000; Alec Bassett, harness shop, $2,000; George Evans, general store, $5,000, insurance $2,000; W. H. Ross, building, $500; Methodist Church, $2,500; insurance $500.

In view of the statement of assets of the closed Exchange bank of Vernon, which appeared in the Times, it may be said that there will be a good deal of assessment against the stockholders, engaged in the sole business of restitution, vengeance, and the most common to sing and shout. For one, I am enough fixed with the beauty of the vision to desire it and to strive for it. And I am immensely encouraged, even when I contemplate my own imperfections, to know that God's law for me is perfection, and that therefore the possibility at last, even for my faulty and slowly developing nature, is perfection. What ground for satisfaction is here! What ground for thanksgiving does this assurance give!

"O, that men would praise the Lord for His goodness, and for the wonders of His love to the children of men!" "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ Jesus!" May we be hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love."

Hotel Clerk Holds Cashier Responsible for Suicide.

Investigations here to have established that Nod Sargeant, the Vernon man who committed suicide in Detroit, with a big gash in his arm, was not stabbed by a footpad man, as he at first claimed, but attempted to commit suicide. "I am satisfied that Sargeant was sent out of his room from the moment he entered it Saturday night until Monday, when he was taken to the morgue," said the clerk of the hotel in which he was found. "His bed was literally soaked with blood. There was not a particle of blood on his coat or shirt, but on his right cuff, on the sleeve, but he forgot to soak it in blood." Sargeant denies that there is any shortage in the bank, and says he has real estate worth $20,000 and will reopen the bank.

FRUIT CULTURE

"Dry Farming" Successful—Marked Effect of One Man's Adopting Modern Methods.

G. A. Smith was called an easy mark when he paid $7,000 for an Oregon ranch four short years ago, but he has fooled the natives, and his first year took a net profit of $12,000. He has refused $40,000 spot cash for the place, and says $70,000 would not buy it.

This is how these things were accomplished, according to a special writer in the Grand Rapids Press:

First he had the big apple orchard on the farm carefully and scientifically pruned. The ground under the trees was cultivated right up to the proper time. The trees were stimulated up until the natural color of the bark was hidden under a layer of germ and insect-delying materials. When the apples came they were thinned in a way to make the natives gasp. And when the fruit reached hardening, cracking season, and the land was planted to the purpose of checking further fruit development.

As the people thus harvesting began and ninety-six per cent of the fruit were No. 1, and commanded the highest price in Chicago.

The effect of this success on surrounding farms has been remarkable. It has since been shown that the whole system of growing fruit, including vinting, pruning and other fruits on other farms, and these results have not only brought up forward the fruit interests of that section, but have increased the value of farm acreage largely. In closing stump land.

Another reason in the advancement of Oceana county has been the "dry farming" method, to which the effect of moisture if greater or less duration is effect by much light surface cultivation which conserves natural moisture over a prolonged period of hot dry weather, that on the bottom day the top soil may be scraped away and the under layers turned out and moist. This system applies with equal advantage to all crops, and appears to be the coming and end of insuring crops regardless of atmospheric conditions, being equal to fifty inches in expensive irrigation projects.

MUST KEEP APART

Judges Believe That Telephone and Telegraph Concerns Should Be Competitors.

Lansing Special of 19th says: In an opinion rendered this afternoon the supreme court denied the petition for a writ of mandamus in the case of the American Telephone and Telegraph company of New York, against Secretary of State Martindale. When the commands applied to the secretary of state for a certificate to do business in this state under a single head, their request was refused by Martindale, on the ground that such a procedure would be a violation of the laws of the state governing the admission of foreign corporations. The company refused to abide by his decision and applied to the supreme court for a writ of mandamus to compel him to issue the certificate.

In refusing the writ the court holds: "For more than a quarter of a century the legislature has seen fit to keep separate these two lines of activity. This course has been followed, too, during a period in which the telephone business of the state has grown from an insignificant emergence to one of great magnitude. Wherever the telegraph line is, there too, is the telephone. In the hands of the independent agencies, it may well be that a healthy competition, for the transmission of information, by electricity, will ensue. We are of the opinion that the legislative enactments, touching the question, indicate a policy on the part of the state, to afford its people a choice of two agencies of independent ownership."

Northern Michigan

Representative Loud has introduced a bill in Congress to appropriate $80,000 for a postoffice building at Petoskey.

A whole trainload of home-seekers arrived in Traverse City one day last week and are now scattered throughout the fruit belt looking for property to suit their individual ideas.

The Gaylord Times says: A good many of the farmers of this section are hauling logs and converting their potatoes and other unmarketable stuffs into pork on account of the high prices for meat.

Rev. J. J. Maskatsed, pastor of the Norwegian church at Petoskey, was shot by an unknown person Saturday evening of last week, the bullet lodging in his neck. He was taken to Traverse City Sunday morning, but the bullet could not be located at that time.

As one method of substantiating her claim to being the biggest city in west-ern Michigan, north of Grand Rapids, Manistee has imported from Forest Islands a full boatload of turkeys for this year's Christmas dinner. Ed Swetz and Robert C Weidt are the consignees.

Stuck on the bridge of the nose with a "stinger," club in the hands of a playmate with whom he was engaged in an exciting game at school a few days ago, Walter Cosler, 11, is dead of tetanus at Sagaw City. The wound made by the club was not considered dangerous at first, but the jaws set after a few hours and the lad suffered great agony before death came to his relief.

Found about all dazed on Torch lake is a small bunch, striking a sand bar at Schwich in the morning after suffering greatly from the exposure, the Rev. Scott of Kalkaska, and Lee Meyers, also of Kalkaska, are recovering from their experience. But for the nerve of Meyers, who waded ashore through the icy water, after the bar had been struck it is possible that both would have perished.

The Traverse City office of the Western Michigan Development bureau has received a consignment of the booklets, "Western Michigan," and these will be given out one to each person calling at the office. Persons desiring additional copies can secure the same at ten cents per copy. Persons desiring booklets mailed to them can have this done by sending the amount of the postage required, three cents.

Traverse City Record: John A. Lonsinger has a specimen that shows clearly what lumbermen will undertake in their dam building. The souvenir, which came from Blackhawk county, is a piece of a white birch tree which had been cut almost through by beavers. At the point where the beavers attacked the tree, it was seven and a half inches through. They were frightened away before they completed their work, but the incision is so deep that the tree had to fall to break off. The cut is clean-ly made and done in a workmanlike manner. Mr. Lonsinger on his recent hunting trip observed five dams in the little Carp river and saw humanoes where the beavers had transported logs six or seven feet long.

S. S. Walker, 80 years old, a pioneer resinous fruit grower, is dead. Mrs. Walker for eight years was a regent of the University of Michigan, having graduated from that institution in 1861, and was also a former member of state legislature. Heart failure was the cause of his death, the end being so sudden that the children could not be summoned to his bedside. Mr. Walker came to the peninsula 20 years ago, purchasing Waters' Edge fruit farm, one of the first fruit farms in the peninsula. Following the example of his neighbors, Mr. Walker took summer boarders, among them being the author, Hilma Hunter. A few years ago Mr. Flower made his summer home famous by his book, "Delightful Isaia," the character from which the book derives its name being a pen picture of Mr. Walker. The body will be taken to Ann Arbor for burial.

Soo News: A meeting of the creditors of A. D. Superneau & Co., the lumbering concern which recently went bankrupt on a timber contract with the Canadian Lumber company of Central Lake, was called this morning in the Park hotel. The meeting brought out the fact that the company had failed in the amounting to about $11,000, with assets of about $10,000. As practically all the assets are encumbered there will be little or nothing left for the unsecured creditors. There are about 30 in all, the majority of whom are from this city. A. D. and H. C. Superneau, members of the defunct firm are attending the meeting. An adjournment was taken this morning until 2 o'clock this afternoon. The company had a contract for a large cut on a tract of land about four miles south of Weiss's siding.

THE STOLEN BICYCLE.

An Exciting Chase That Ended in an All Around Capture.

A cyclist had left his machine outside a shoe, and he emerged just in time to see a man riding away on it. Three other cyclists had put up for refreshments close by, and one of their machines, a tandem, was seized by the victim of the theft for the purpose of pursuit. The lousy act was observed by a passing pedestrian, who instantly and boldly mounted the remaining machine and dashed after the cyclist who was chasing the thief.

A second later the owner of the last mentioned bicycle rushed wildly out, and, seeing no other bicycle handy on which to give chase, jumped into a cab. Now there were three men on motor cycles and the fourth man in a cab all racing as if mad. The man on the tandem finally caught the thief, the next man caught him and the first caught him, and so on, until there was a very complicated row.

In the end there was an explanation. The thief was locked up and ultimately sentenced for two months. Evidently his pride was more wounded by the street upbraids than by the sentence, for he beautifully declared that no single man on a tandem ever would have caught him and he not been riding to long trousers.—Exchange.

A Costly Experiment.

An enterprising Australian millionaire named Leonard took a trip to Peru some years ago. He saw great flocks of the alpaca wandering on the Andes. Being a woolgrower himself he was struck with their splendid fleece. He resolved to buy some and take them home. He found that the Peruvian government absolutely prohibited their export. He tried by chartering a special ship to smuggle some off, but was unsuccessful. Then the idea occurred to him of taking them out of the country outward. He bought a large flock, engaged trusty men and had the creatures driven over the passes, 18,000 feet above sea level, and then clean across the continent to Buenos Aires. This little expedition cost him $25,000. But the long march had so ventilated the alpacas that they all died on the voyage.

A Banker.

Home—Don't you know anything about golf?

Wife—Not much. Why?

Home—What's a bunker? Do you know?

Wife—I suppose it's one of those crazies that simply live on the links.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

The Jest which is expected is already destroyed.—Johnson.

Rich Men's Gifts are Poor

beside this: "I want to go on record as saying that I regard Electric Bitters as one of the greatest gifts that God has made to woman," writes Mrs. O. Hinkernell, of Vestal Center, N. Y., "I can never forget what it has done for me." This glorious medicine gives a woman buoyant spirits, vigor of body and jubilant health. It quickly cures nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, headache, backache, fainting and dizzy spells; soon builds up the weak, ailing and sickly. Try them. 50c at F. G. Hines & Co.

Moonlight Blindness.

Moonlight most intense sometimes does sore eyes in Cuba, and the natives navigate and perambulate with umbrella and parasol. This very obstinate affection is cured by washing the eyes with sassafras tea, or, for Infinitable Frank Stephens, former consul general to Cuba, said. And no strange a joke and cure after all, for such doses have been found to be radioactive and electric.

Reflections of a Loser.

The parimutuel machine sets up your hard earned cash with the savoir faire of a bookmaker, say it spares you the sardonic smile. And then, it doesn't even the horse on which you lose.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Wasted Education.

A clerk in a New York law office was discharged because he tried to raise a new office boy. What's the use of having a college education if you can't use it in your business?—Buffalo Express.

"No Master Hand.

There's no greater practitioner in the sugar-coating business than the very devil himself.

Paraguay Tea.

The yerba mate, or Paraguay tea, is an immense consumption in the lower parts of South America, almost to the exclusion of tea and coffee. It grows wild and plentiful, is easy as dirt and has a good per cent. of theine, the active principle of tea and coffee, but less than either. It has a genuine high therapeutic, soothing, stimulating effect upon the nervous and it is whole system. The people over a to go part of South America have it in very strongest belief in its curative and controlling effects.

Wisecracks.

The wisdom of the wise is no doubt a fine thing, but exclusive seems to want it tempered by the folly of fools, otherwise there wouldn't be so many of the latter. Wisdom is wise, but it is often timid; folly is foolish, but it is also bold. A thousand years ago a fool would have feared to travel where now we all walk in security, thanks to somebody having rushed in ahead, standing—Puck.

Modern Eccentricity.

Wealthy eccentric person recently died and left a will. "I've never noticed it, he seems to me to be rather a sensible sort of chap." "But he cuts up some his baby daughter Sarah."

All Up with Him Then.

"Many a man," says Brother Gizzard, "has blamed "twixt de devil an' de deep sea, an' he can't tell dat, for he knows how he gets."—Atlanta Constitution.

Wrong Number.

This popular fruit takes its name from Cerasus, Kerasunt, a city of Asia Minor, from which region the cherry was first introduced into Europe by the Roman General Lucullus in the year B. C. 74. The cherry introduced by the Romans at the date given died out, and was reintroduced in the reign of Henry VIII. by Richard Harbes, the fruiterer of that monarch.

WARSHIPS ORDERED RUSHED TO CORINTO

Cruiser Albany and the Gunboat Yorktown Are Sent to Nicaraguan Waters.

PASSPORTS GIVEN TO ENVOY.

Dictator Held Responsible for Killing of Americans—Rush Marines to Scene of Trouble.

The first step of the United States government toward backing up the declaration made by Secretary of State Knox regarding the Nicaraguan situation was taken Thursday when the Secretary of the Navy sent urgent orders to the commanders of the cruiser Albany and the gunboat Yorktown, the two American warships which are now at Magdalena Bay, lower California, to proceed forthwith to Corinto, the Pacific coast port of Nicaragua, nearest to the capital of that country.

By the direction of the President, the Secretary of State Wednesday evening informed the Nicaraguan minister of all diplomatic relations with the government of President Zelaya of Nicaragua. At the same time the secretary gave formal recognition to the belligerency of the Nicaraguan revolutionists.

The action of the secretary was made the more dramatic by the transmission of passports to the diplomatic agents of President Zelaya for their use in case they wish to leave the country. If these agents decline to remain they will be received as the unofficial representatives of President Zelaya, just as the secretary proposes to receive the representatives of Genaro Ramada, the leader of the revolution ists.

The action by Secretary Knox does not necessarily mean war. It is preliminary to the formal demand which will be made upon the government of President Zelaya for reparation for the execution by his direction of two American citizens who were entitled to the judgment of the state department to be dealt with according to the enlightened practice of civilized nations. It may be the demand which will be made. The encouragement the note of the Secretary of State will give to the revolution will be, it is expected, the death blow to Zelaya.

A wireless dispatch received at Colon from Bluefields says: "After five hours of fighting Saturday the revolutionists under General Mainty defeated 300 government troops in the neighborhood of the Tapac mine above Rama. Several standards and a quantity of arms and ammunition fell into the hands of General Mainty. The Zelaya troops lost eighty men killed and many wounded, while the revolutionists, who fought behind breastworks and other protections, lost twenty men killed."

MURDERS LAID TO BROTHERS.

Arrests at Philadelphia for a Series of Crimes at Berwick, Pa.

Charged with being implicated in a series of "black hand" outrages, which the police say included three murders, Antonio Calabra was arrested in Philadelphia and returned to Berwick, Pa., in custody of a member of the State constabulary. His brother, Fortunato, and another alleged member of the band were arrested at Tamaqua and also were sent to Berwick. Antonio Calabra and his brother Fortunato were residents of West Berwick, where they are said to have been leaders of a "black hand" gang which in 1906 is alleged to have killed and disposed of the bodies of nine Italians. At that time cellars under the houses of the suspects were dug up, but no bodies were found. Several of the murders occurred while the Calabra brothers were in the Eastern penitentiary, serving sentences for extortion. One month ago Fortunato was pardoned by Gov. Stuart and his brother's term expired several months ago.

FIRE SWEEPS BALTIMORE.

$1,000,000 Loss at Scene of 1904 Disaster.

Baltimore's great wholesale district, just across the border line from the section of the city where the fire of 1904 started, was swept by flames Thursday evening. The loss will total at least $1,000,000. Five firemen were badly injured. The fire was getting under control at 3 o'clock. The extraordinary feature which led to the catastrophe of 1904 were missing, however, and after a consultation it was decided unnecessary to call on cities for help, as was done five years ago. Lombard and Sharp streets were the scene of Thursday night's fire.

BUFF FREE, BOND IS $300,000.

San Francisco Boss Released on Account of Ill Health.

Judge Cabaniss in San Francisco ordered the release from custody of Abraham Ruef on $200,000 bail. This action followed a report of three physicians appointed by the court to examine the physical condition of the former political leader. Ruef had been confined in the county jail since November 15 of last year, his previous bail having been declared forfeited on the day Prosecutor Francis J. Heney was shot in the courtroom. Ruef is under sentence of fourteen years in the State prison for having bribed a supervisor to vote for a trolley franchise for the United Railroads.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY.

Kentucky's burley and other grades of tobacco in the 1909 crop will be in the largest quantity ever known, nearly 400,000,000 pounds. This was announced by the banks of Louisville, which have been gathering figures from their various correspondents in the counties where "the weed" is grown.

Thousands of acres of corn in the Shenandoah district about Hutco, S. D., were buried beneath the immense frost snowdrifts that formed during the recent snowfall. The farmers have been prevented from harvesting the corn by the scarcity of farm help. A considerable amount of the corn may be lost.

James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, says that we have raised 2,767,000,000 bushels of corn in the United States this year, the average being 25.4 bushels and the quality 84.2. He places the corn in farmers' hands at 79,793,000 bushels, or 3 per cent of the crop of 1908. Last year's corn was 2,668,651,000 bushels, or an average of 26.1 bushels and the quality 84.4, the amount in farmers' hands Nov. 1 was 75,114,000 bushels, or 2.7 per cent of the crop.

The total production in Minneapolis for 1908 far exceeds that of either 1906 or 1907. Five mills were in operation during the year and the estimated output is 120,000,000 barrels. For 1907 it was 118,091,472 bbls., while in 1907 the output was 114,192,932 bbls.

President Taft at the White House, Washington, D. C., presed a button which opened the great national apple show at Spokane, Wash. The President of the United States sent to Howard Elliott, president of the show, the following message: "Hearty congratulations to the promoters of the second annual apple show and best wishes for a successful."

BIG INSURANCE TRANSACTION.

Equitable Is Sold by Ryan to Morgan in a Gigantic Deal.

J. Pierpont Morgan gains control of the Equitable Life Insurance Society, with its $472,000,000 of assets. Official announcement was made in New York Thursday of this gigantic transaction. Purchase of the majority of the stock of the huge corporation was made by the Wall street wizard from Thomas F. Ryan, who acquired the company from the Hyde interests after the upheaval in the company's affairs. It was just as the commissioners, called to agree with six months' insurance, the change of the printed statements, as required by the terms of the settlement, became necessary to report to the officials of the State of New York.

The International Exhibition of Industry and Commerce, first held under the auspices of the Turin municipality in 1884, between the United States and Great Britain, but completed a system of uniform and common international regulations for the protection and preservation of the food labor in international boundary waters of the United States and Canada.

The regulations will be duly submitted to Congress with a view to the enactment of such legislation as may be necessary under the convention to put them into effect.

Spain and Morocco have agreed on a settlement of international differences between the two countries, which, including the supportment between the Spanish and Moroccan forces of the boundary waters and the appointment of commissioners to settle questions other questions, signed on the 11th day of January, 1909, and ratified by the action of which the Senate gave its advice and consent on May 19, 1909, but has not yet been ratified on the part of Great Britain.

Representative Murdock of Kansas, on his arrival in Washington, gave out an interview in which he declared Congressman was weakened of his zeal, and on no account would he be drawn into a contest. He said he expected to see friends of the speaker active in his behalf, but Murdock is preparing to begin a campaign for radical changes in the rules of the House.

William J. Bryan went to Arizona last week to visit his brother, but there he will go to Texas to look after his property on the Gulf Coast, and Illinois and for Panama to make a personal inspection of the big ditch. This done he will make a tour around South America, visiting the Argentine Chaco, but getting back in time to fill an engagement to address New York city on his stock subject, "Ireland, Land and Liberty." "If there is a demand for me to make the race I will not refuse the nomination," he said.

Justice Brewer, of the Supreme Court, sitting in the Eighth Circuit, granted a writ of habeas corpus in the case of Frank Drew, a Kansas City, Mo., negro, who was held in custody of the United States on the charge of peonage. Drew was arrested in Kansas City, Mo., on a charge of having violated the peonage laws by holding Ed Jones, a negro, in a state of involuntary servitude.

CHARGE WOMAN WITH MURDER.

Wife Alleged to Have Caused W. J. Erdorf's Death by Poisoning.

White arsenic placed in William J. Erdorf's food by his blameless bride caused his death in St. Louis, according to a warrant charging Mrs. Dora E. Doxey with murder in the first degree. The charge is based on a report by William H. Warren, dean of the medical department of Washington University, who analyzed the organs of Erdorf's body after it had been disinterred at the request of Miss Kate Erdorf, a sister. Mrs. Doxey, who collected $2,700 life insurance on Erdorf and $200 on his sister Elizabeth, is under guard at Columbus, Neb. She will resist extradition to St. Louis, according to a telegram. The only explanation now in effect is based on a charge of infidelity, due to the charge that Mrs. Doxey illegally married Erdorf while the wife of Dr. Loren Hasco Doxey.

RISING RAILROAD DICTATOR.

Hawley Purchases Frisco, Diverting System from Rock Island.

By acquiring control of the Frisco lines, Wednesday, Edwin Hawley stepped 6,219 miles nearer to complete domination of the Western railroads. He now controls the Toledo, St. Louis & Southwestern, the Chicago & Alton, Minneapolis & St. Louis, Chesapeake & Ohio and Missouri, Kansas & Texas, to Pacific, Chicago & Eastern Illinois and Evansville & Terre Haute. The Frisco lines are now completely segregated from Le Roy Island and Mr. Hawley's first move, it is said, will be to rejuvenate and place them on an improved and paying basis.

KILLS MOTHER AND SELF.

Fugitive Also Slays Deputy and Wounds Farmer and Wife.

After killing his mother and a deputy sheriff and wounding, probably fatally, a farmer and the latter's wife, who he turned loose in horse infirmaries against a posse, Clyde Weaver killed himself by a bullet through the head. The battle occurred in Franklin Township, nine miles east of Greenville, Ohio, and Weaver ended his life in the home of Levi Miller, where he had taken refuge after shooting Minnich and wife. Weaver returned from Illinois the previous week, after being paroled from the Dayton workhouse under promise to keep out of Ohio. He was under a year for threatening to kill the family of James Hopper.

PAY FINES FOR LAND FRAUD.

Fifteen Citizens of Coalville County, Utah, Pay $1,000 Each.

Fines aggregating $45,000 were paid in the Federal court in Portland, Ore., Wednesday by fifteen citizens of Coalville, Utah, who pleaded guilty to having defrauded the government of part of the public domain. Col. E. A. Jennings, one of the most prominent attorneys of eastern Oregon, paid the heaviest fine, $10,000. The others who pleaded guilty were stockmen, ranchers and business and professional men.

BIG RAILROAD STRIKE SEEMS ALMOST CERTAIN

Every Line, East and West, Opposing Brotherhood Wage Demands, Courts War.

ROADS TO FIGHT UNITED UNIONS

More than a Million Men to Be Directly Engaged in Great Industrial Contest.

The United States is threatened with the greatest railroad strike in the history of its annals. Practically every railroad line in the country, east and west, is in imminent danger of being completely tied up by a walkout on the part of large numbers of its employes unless the demands of the organizations of engineers, firemen, trainmen and switchmen be agreed upon a uniform demand of a 10 per cent wage increase, without deviation or compromise.

That the crisis is approaching rapidly was indicated by the announcement at New York by officers of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen that they would "present their demands on the 15th of this month, and the wage conference will begin on the 15th. Although every effort will be made to avert a general strike, it is impossible to predict what the outcome of the conference will be."

Both the railroads and the leaders of organized labor among the railroad employes are reticent as to the strategic which when it once begins will without doubt develop into one of the most stubborn battles the country ever been fought in this or any other land. The attitude of the leaders on both sides of the dispute which menaces the industrial peace of the country is at the present time that of iron silence.

While it is known that it is not the plan of the leaders in the railroad labor organizations to call out all the men at one time their intention is said to be to those who are acquainted with their plans, to call out sufficient men on each big system to make operation a practical impossibility.

This means that over a million men will engage directly in a battle with the railroads unless some fortunate circumstance arises to avert the trouble. More than 150,000 miles of railroad track will cease to bear their burdens of freight and passengers, with the consequent paralyzing effect on the commerce of the country, unless a settlement is reached quickly.

Millions to Build Canadian Lines.

According to an official report the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway will spend for construction in Western Canada this year $28,000,000, and for rolling stock and material $20,000,000.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Chicago Trade says:

"Business generally exhibits sustained progress throughout the leading branches of activity. It is notable that the volume of payments through the banks exceeds all former high totals for this time of year.

"There are, however, some temporary drawbacks, but these do not weaken confidence in the immediate outlook. Trading defaults are still above the usual number. The switchmen's strike is embarrassing to shippers, and the mild weather is responsible for smaller buying of seasonable necessaries.

"Movements of commodities tently to largely improved conditions in manufactures. There is an increased output of grain and a satisfactory disposition of provisions.

"Reports from the farm show that winter wheat and rye thrive well over an acreage much larger than reported a year ago. Agriculturists bought to supply their personal needs liberally here while attending the live stock and land exhibitions.

"Country banks now increase their recently depleted deposits in this resource center and money is easier in tone, but choice commercial paper remains quoted from 5 to 5½ per cent discount.

"Wholesale dry goods houses made successful clearance sales in preparation for the annual inventories. Mail and road orders continue good for deliveries of spring needs.

"Bank clearings, $1,237,326,447, exceed those of the corresponding week of last year by 18.1 per cent and compare with $290,464,536 in 1907.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district number thirty, against twenty-three last week, twenty in 1908 and eighteen in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number seven, against seven last week, five in 1908 and seven in 1907."

NEW YORK.

Trade reports show rather more irregularity, varying with sections reporting. Some unsettle retail lines there is a renewal of the complaint of warm weather affecting sales of wearing apparel, while bad roads in parts of the central West and the southwest, with the Northwest are responsible for a colder trade and an interruption to the normal every day activities. In the purely holiday trade rather more activity is noted. The jobbing trade is good.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending Dec. 2 were 221, against 217 last week, 238 in the like week of 1908, 272 in 1907, 216 in 1906, and 205 in 1905.

Business failures in Canada for the week numbered twenty-five, which compares with twenty-four last week and thirty-eight in the same week last year.

THE SUGAR FACTORY

Campaign Closed—Results Satisfactory but Beet Acreage Inadequate.

The best sugar factory about the last of its raw material last Thursday, and Saturday night the sugar hoppers were empty.

Within the limits of a small acreage of beets, the results have been fairly satisfactory. The tonnage of beets was about the same as last year, and the saccharine percentage somewhat better, which improvement constituted a decided increase of profit to the farmers. A very much better quality of sugar was made this year than last, due to the experience of past years and a better understanding of the work all along the line.

One fact has been emphatically demonstrated: The sugar beet is the best crop the farmers of Northern Michigan can raise, barring fruit, and that is not a competitor. From every section where beets were raised come evidences of satisfactory, classical results. The farmers, too, are learning. They are no longer freshman in the school of beet culture; but many are sophomores and many more seniors. Their experience has been profitable.

Another fact that should be considered seriously by the farmers is the disparity between the acreage of beets so far raised and the necessities of the plant from the view point of profit to the owners thereof.

The plant, at the outset, represents an outlay of approximately $300,000. This represents $15,000 interest annually. When to this is added the cost of operation, insurance, taxes, "sweeteners" and incidentals, the outlay is far from reasonable remuneration.

The plant is of great importance to this section, and more important to farmers than to any other class. There are few adverse conditions to overcome to beet culture and it is no longer an experiment. The acreage should be greatly increased next year.

Just a Matter of Fairness.

The SENTINEL has been charged with "taking sides" in this midsummer Swift matter, and assuming an attitude which tends to unduly embarrass public opinion pending trial.

We have not taken sides. We are but assuming the innocence of the accused until he is proven guilty. There have been many innocent men hanged as a result of public clamor, conspiracy and circumstantial evidence. There is a popular prejudice community, who would besmirch the raiment of the Savior of the world if he were now walking among men. Aristides was banished from Athens because the populace became weary of hearing him called "Aristides the just."

If the editor of this paper, notwithstanding his manifold virtues, were charged with stealing a hog or robbing a clothes line, there are doubtless people in Charlevoix who would not accord the one solitary porker to a yard full of hogs and add a ton of coal to the clothes line allegation. Charity and mercy never deafened the ears of justice.

We decline to take the word of a combination of picked up street gamins unchallenged, in a matter that involves the future of a man who has done so much good in the world as Herman L. Swift has, until the evidence has been ground through the mill of skilled, solemn and impartial legal investigation and judgment, and that can only come at the bar of the circuit court. "A prophet is not without honor save in his own country." Public clamor centers in and is most pronounced at Boyne City where Mr. Swift lives. This clamor is more likely to influence a justice court against the accused than anything this paper may say will swerve public sentiment in his favor.

Let us possess our souls in patience and charity.

Tax Notice.

To the taxpayers of the City of Charlevoix:

The December tax roll for the city of Charlevoix is now in my hands for collection and the taxes therein levied are payable at my office in the Vasburg building on or before January 8th, 1910, without charge for collection. On all taxes remaining unpaid on said date an expense of one dollar will be added as delinquent city taxes and assessments, a collection fee of 4 per cent will be added and collected.

My office will be open for the collection of said taxes from 8:30 a. m. to 12 m. and from 1:30 p. m. to 5 p. m. except on Saturdays when the hours will be 8:30 a. m. to 12 m. and from 1:30 p. m. to 6:30 p. m.

Dated December 7, 1909.

4-2 JOEN COOK, City Treasurer.

CAPT. LUCIEN YOUNG

Wants the Government to Pay Him For the Expense of His Horseback Ride.

Are army and navy officers entitled to mileage or traveling expenses while taking the physical test required by regulations either a horseback, on a bicycle or afoot?

Captain Lucien Young, formerly lighthouse inspector of the Lake Michigan district, and well known in Charlevoix, who is now in barge of the Marine Island Navy Yard and who is noted in the Naval Register as having been advanced in grade "for eminent and conspicuous conduct during the war with Spain," maintains that they are, and he has come forward in behalf of himself and his fellow officers with an earnest and courageous demand that these rights should be respected. But the stony-hearted Comptroller of the Treasury, in an opinion published to day, says "Nay, nay."

Captain Young is one of the best known officers of the navy. When it came time for him to take the test of his physical ability he elected to take the 250 mile "hike" one horseback, instead of going afoot or a wheel. Perhaps an inclination towards uniform point helped him to reach this decision. Anyway he claims that he had to procure his own mounts (naval officers not ordinarily maintaining a private stable) and pay hotel and livery bills at quite a considerable expense.

But the hard-hearted government turned down his claim.

Osborn's Cause Still Growing.

The information is being wafted down to us from the north that upper peninsula politics is at a white heat in the cause of Chase S. Osborn for governor, and an occasional migratory bird whispers in our ear that republicans of that imperial section of Michigan loyally yet earnestly demand the recognition that has so long been denied them.

There is no mistaking the fact that the upper peninsula republicans are in dead earnest in this matter, and the fact furnishes republicans of the lower peninsula much food for serious thought.

The upper peninsula has long held the balance of power in republican conventions and at the polls. Its statesmanship has always been as impregnable in its own rock-bound shores to the storms of old Superior.

There are very many working republicans in the sections of the lower peninsula who recognize a danger in the present political situation, and who with the Osborn candidacy as the logical element through which, and only through which, a safe and sane policy can heal the party.

Mr. Osborn's cause is daily gaining strength in southern and central Michigan. His record and his magnetic personality are adding to his already large number of strong friends in these parts — opinion is hourly gaining strength that old fashioned (if we may use the term) may safely rally around the Osborn cause with the certainty of victory.

In Michigan, as in the future in national secondary is concerned, "the times are out of joint," and it is only by party harmony and the election of party men in office we can hope to win the election of 1910.

The way is plainly marked out for us. Shall we traverse it?

W. R. C. Report.

The following is the official report of Baxter W. R. C. for Nov. and Dec. 1909:

Nov. 11th was our regular meeting and we had the pleasure of greeting Carrie Hemstreet, of Indiana, State Inspector of Michigan, who gave us very valuable instruction in our work and encouragement as to our advancement in members and interest. In spite of the bad storm there were eighteen members present and all enjoyed the elegant supper served after the work was finished.

All expressed the wish to have the inspector with us again as soon as possible.

Dec. 10th was election of officers, the of which will be printed after installation, which will be jointly with the Post after a six o'clock supper and after the work a short program. All members of Post and Corps are requested to be present and bring their partners. The Corps is gaining rapidly, having forty members in good standing and five members coming in at every meeting.

A Foolish Question.

A reader of the New York World writes in that paper to ask whether it is proper for a young man to send candy to a girl whom he has met but once. What a question! Why, most young men begin handing a girl candy as soon as they are introduced to her.

Neighborly Consideration.

—Tuesday was the shortest day in the year, and the official, or astronomical winter, began at 6 o'clock Wednesday morning.

—Supt. DeVoe, of the city schools, left Saturday for his former home at Mt. Pleasant to spend the holidays. About all the staff of teachers are also visiting their homes.

—The SENTINEL job office has some very fine wedding announcement stock, and stationery that is just what you want in your business. Come in and look over the goods.

—Hev. Elsie add daughter returned Tuesday night after spending ten days in Stanton, Kalamazoo and Bronson, Michigan. He is preparing a specially fine illustrated service for next Sunday evening.

—The local fish battlery closed Sunday, having hatched out all the trout eggs in stock. Mr. Cole, of the hatchery force, left Monday with the fry for Northville, and Mr. Stewart will follow in a few days.

—Winter fishing is now in full blast again, and local wholesalers are busy with Chicago and lower lake shipments. Advices from the Beavers state that the catch is fairly satisfactory—mostly whitefish, with some trout and perch. The local figures at the fish warehouses show up well.

—Grand Lecturer Maynard, of the Grand Chapter Royal Arch Masons, was here Thursday night, on the occasion of the exhalation of three Royal Arch Masons by Charlevoix Chapter No. 141. After the ceremonies a banquet was served. The event was a very enjoyable Masonic gathering.

—Some of the Charlevoix merchants are complaining that the big grange event in Traverse City last week made made a big hole in their holiday trade, inasmuch as many farmers made Christmas purchases there. In view of the fact that the state grange meets at Traverse City at about the same time next year, it may not be amiss to remind our farmer friends that we have yet to hear of Traverse City merchants buying any of their farm products from the sale of which they get the money to buy Christmas presents. Goods can be bought as cheaply in Charlevoix as in Traverse City, and Charlevoix people consume the butter and eggs and a large proportion of other products that are raised here.

—Representative Grieet of Pennsylvania has introduced a bill to establish a fish farm, and hatchery in towns of more than 1,000 population, having second or third class postoffices. These towns are to furnish the land, free of cost to the government, however, it will.

—A telegram was received Saturday conveying to relatives the sad news of the death in a railroad wreck near Cleveland, of John Swails, second son of Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Swails and brother of Silas W. Swails and Mrs. J. H. Parsons, of this city. Deceased was employed as fireman on the steamer Chase S. Osborn until last August, when he went to Cleveland to accept a position as locomotive fireman on the New York Central, where his brother-in-law is an engineer. He was about twenty-one years old, and already, industrious boy. The remains arrived here Monday night.

—Why don't some local poet send us a few stanzas on "The Beautiful"—not Charlevoix the Beautiful, but the beautiful snow?

—Mr. and Mrs. Dan Williams, of the Harbor Point lighthouse, have moved to this city for the winter and are occupying their north side home.

—Scarcely a day that the SENTINEL is not increasing its circulation by reason of the splendid clubbing offers made. Come in and talk with us about the matter.

—Mrs. Mason, who lives in Arkansas, and is a sister of the late Mrs. Staley, of Eveline, and of W. H. Miller, of this city, is here. Mr. Miller had not seen Mrs. Mason in thirty-five years.

—Capt. "Ely" Miller, of Frankfort, former in charge of the Point Betsy life saving station, is here for a week's visit. Capt. Miller, who is a veteran of the life saving service, is yet enjoying his two years pay following retirement.

—As we go to press Wednesday afternoon a northwest blizzard prevails with the usual piling up in immense drifts. The arrival of trains is the most pronounced kind of an uncertainty, and it looks as if the farmers will have a hard time getting to town for their Christmas supplies. Dec. 21st, 1909, will go down in history as "the time of the big snow."

—Traverse City Eagle: On Saturday Arma & Cole will complete the work on the 25 bath rooms they have been installing in the Inn at Charlevoix, with the exception of about a week that will be necessary to test them out in the spring. They were able to finish the work on account of the good weather that has prevailed this fall, which enabled the men to continue the work without interruption. Their contract called for the work to be finished by June 1.

—The local option campaign has a pretty good start in Antrim county, and the Elk Rapids Progress is publishing some good stuff on the subject. Perhaps the SENTINEL lays itself open to criticism for dabbling into Antrim county matters, but we think we are justified in saying a word on the subject now and then. Charlevoix county is dry; Antrim county is wet. Because of the better fact, Charlevoix county has paid heavy tribute to Antrim county booze dealers the past nine months. Many ordinary Charlevoix drunks celebrated in Antrim county have made much trouble, but the worst of all occurred last week when a Charlevoix man indulged in a protracted Antrim county spree and then came home and died from the effects of it. No doubt the degenerate who took the man's money in exchange for the privilege of killing him will tell you about local option depriving a citizen of his "personal liberty." There is nothing particularly startling about the manner of this man's death, because hundreds are dying in a like manner every day all over the country. Yes, Charlevoix county has a deep interest in the Antrim county local option cause, because Antrim county has gathered in a good many Charlevoix county shekels in an unholy traffic.

—It is a fact, says the Allegan Gazette, that the abolishment of the saloons and the enforcement of the new liquor law have done wonders for a certain class in Allegan. Everywhere one hears of this "boozer" or that one having money and spending it for food, clothing, fuel and the other necessities, and the families of these men are going to pass through the cold months in greater comfort and pleasure than for years. Without mentioning any names, it is safe to say that there are twenty live of these men in Allegan today who have purchased liberal supplies of coal or wood, bought good clothes, and made provision for their families in years past was only thought of when absolute need was at hand, and then were bought in smallest possible quantity, or application was made to the poor fund. What a great thing this local option is for those people, forced on the "boozers" as it was, and how thankful certainly the wives, mothers and children must be for so good a condition of things! Just look about you and see the thankful hearts because, where for years back the husband and father has come home regularly drunk, and with scanty provisions it may, now he walks into his home sober and with his arms full of good things. There are many just such circumstances in Allegan today, and further, a number of these men who before went about penniless now have savings bank accounts.

THE SWIFT CASE

Beulah Home Manager Bound Over to Circuit Court—Is Jailed in Default of Bail.

In the Boyne City justice court last Wednesday, Herman L. Swift, manager of Beulah Home for Boys, was bound over to circuit court in $4,000 bonds in each of the three cases and the same not being forthcoming, he was taken to the jail at Charlevoix and locked up. Evidence thus far adduced is all on the side of the prosecution, Swift declaring that when the time comes he will be able to secure an acquittal. The office of manager of the boys' home is elective and Mr. Swift's term will not expire until the end of two years.

Future plans of the board of directors are not given out, but all are emphatic in their statements that the home will be hereafter conducted on a still broader scale than in the past.

Judge Mayne on Friday granted an order restraining Swift, from using the funds of the home or encumbering the property in any way.

This is merely a preliminary order until proceedings can be had, and is not a judicial dissolution of gifts.

There are three charges against him brought by six of the boy inmates of the home. The home has about $5,000 on deposit in the bank at Boyne City in the name of Herman L. Swift, trustee. The board of trustees asked that Swift give up his position as superintendent until he was proven innocent of the charges and this he refused to do. He also contended that he had a right to use the home's funds to secure any possible bondsman against losses, hence the court order.

The popular impression has been that the home is a corporation and that a board of trustees, composed of some of the most prominent men in Boyne City, was in control. Thousands of persons have contributed money, provisions, clothing or articles that could be converted into money, to the home and there is much interest in the case. There is every disposition to give Swift a square deal on the part of the board, but they do not wish to take chances. It is said that it is doubtful if the Beulah home really has any corporate existence.

The Gladdest Day of the Year.

Thank the Lord for Christmas, and thank him, also, that there is a Santa Claus. The personality of good St. Nicholas may be questioned by the hypercritical but he nevertheless lives—lives in the hearts of the children, and what iconoclast dare rob them of their belief in him? He has brought joy to many a throbbing little soul on that morning, of all mornings—the morning that the Prince of Peace came into the world to bring it joy.

And, thank the Lord again, that there are old folks with young hearts—hearts made younger once a year, when the Christmastide comes around; old folks who share the happiness of the little ones, and are made glad by the childish shouts as the stockings are emptied; old folks who believe in Santa Claus because baby does; old folks who sneak into the house at night with treasures for the Christmas tree; old folks who have Christmas thoughts for those less favored than themselves.

Doubtless there will be sad hearts in Charlevoix Christmas morning, because of the ones that are missing from the hearthstone; but to those that remain with us let us contribute our fullest measure of good cheer and Christmas joy. The SENTINEL wishes everyone a Merry Christmas.

Thank the Lord for Christmas and Santa Claus!

The Accident That Killed Swails.

Following is the press special giving particulars of the railroad wreck near Cleveland in which John Swails, of this city was killed:

In a collision between a Lake Shore passenger train and switch engine, five were killed and ten more or less badly injured.

The dead are:

H. L. Adams, engineer passenger train; John Swails, fireman switch engine; John Frank, switchman; Engineer Burts, switch engine; unidentified man.

The passenger train was running at high speed and cars are piled in a mass of wreckage. Intense cold added to the suffering of the injured.

LOST—In Charlevoix Saturday, Nov. 27, a gold brooch with the letters N. H. Ingraved on it. Finder will please leave at the SENTINEL office and receive reward. 1 f

GIVES THEM A CHANCE

Probationers Brought Before the Court Showed That They Have Made Good and Taken Advantage of Opportunities

At the afternoon session of Circuit court yesterday, says the Traverse City Record, Judge Mayne gave those present a talk on the placing out on probation prisoners who have been convicted and sentenced. He stated that the prisoner who has become criminal through misfortune or accident should have the opportunity to do better and particularly when such a prisoner is the head of a family. During the last term of court there were two probationers brought before the court and one this term and in both instances it was shown that they had made good and were working and earning good wages. This shows the worth of putting prisoners out on parole, and while they are out on parole they are under the strict surveillance of the probation officer and the judge is able to keep in close touch with them at all times and keep himself advised as to how they employ their time. Many a man or boy has been saved from going down deeper to the depths of crime by being placed on parole and in time has become a good citizen and keeps away from the paths of crime.

There is approximately $12,500 paid out yearly in salaries to officers and in fees for the bringing to justice of criminals or those who have become criminals through accident and fully one-third to one-fourth of this amount could be saved to the state if more prisoners were put out on probation.

As there were so many representatives from the different counties, Judge Mayne thought this an opportune moment to explain to them in a clear way why prisoners were put out on parole, and especially what kind of prisoners were paroled.

Will Stand On Its Own Legs.

The directors of the Western Michigan Development bureau met at Traverse City Friday afternoon and flatly turned down a proposition to make the bureau state-wide in its scope. While the bureau will co-operate with the Lansing Manufacturers' association to the upper peninsula now in the process of formation, actual membership will be limited strictly to 20 counties.

An application was received from Oscoda county and was favorably acted upon, while Missaukee, Montcalm, Mecosta and Ottawa counties were invited to come in and make the membership at 20.

George E. Howe, superintendent, presented his resignation, which was accepted and the bureau tendered a vote of thanks for his work. The publicity bureau will be continued in Traverse City in charge of H. H. Ellsworth. Reports showed that $12,000 in all had been expended for the Chicago exhibit, $8,000 for the exhibit itself and $4,000 for preliminary work. With all the pledges paid, the bureau will be heavily in debt, but if all the money promised comes in, then it will be just about even. The fruit exhibit shown at Chicago and at the grange meeting here will be taken to Detroit and placed on exhibition there.

Capt. Jim Reid Stricken.

A Port Huron special conveys the news that Capt. James Reid, the well-known wrecker, has been stricken with apoplexy at Port Burwell, Ont. His condition is stated to be serious, and he is being taken to his home in Sarnia as fast as possible.

Capt. Reid is the head of the wrecking firm having offices in Sarnia and Port Huron. In Port Huron they also have a drydock. The headquarters for the tugs is Sarnia. Capt. Reid is himself the senior member of the firm, though he is upwards of 65 years old. Hixson, James, runs the Port Huron office and another son, Thomas, operates the Sarnia business.

Capt. Reid had just succeeded in getting the sunken car ferry John Shape to leave it for others to finish, and was on the point of leaving for the Soo to look over the wreck of steamer Winslow stricken. He has done some big wrecking jobs the last several years, and it is currently reported that the firm cleared $100,000 the past season. Capt. Reid is well known in Charlevoix.

The people gathered as they did at their usual service and listened to the address to which Deputies had listened with such astonishment and rapture. The entire community of Friends was there, for even Quakers cannot entirely repress their curiosity. There was a tension of deep feeling that even of suppressed excitement. The men in their broad-brimmed hats, the women in the poke bonnets, moved with an almost measured cadence through the evening shadows. The pains and groans conveyed to rapid anger with groans. They did not linger outside the door, but entered hastily and took their places as if some great event were about to happen.

There was a preliminary service of worship and according to custom, opportunity was given for prayer or exhortation. But all minds were too intent upon what was to follow to enable them to take part with spirit. The silence was broken by Jonathan Dale, the young people moved restlessly on their seats, and Ruth Corson seemed filled with silent glances of disapproval, all where to look and how to conceal or upset the gravity of these calm and strength. Jonathan, and it was not until after a suitable time had elapsed that the leader of the meeting arose, and said: "The time has arrived when David and Deborah desire to be joined with their marriage, unless there be some cause why this should not be announced."

A flutter ran through the assembly, and a murmur of surprise passed from David Dale, while every eye was fixed on him.

"My friends," he said, in a voice whose quickness and sweetness allayed their tumult, "you have returned from journeying into the sons of my life during the three years of my absence. I would be glad if I could unburden to from some of the sorrowful feel that I must make a confession of my sins."

In the death-like stillness he began. It was not in his nature to be dramatic, but the deep feeling of him who told his natural society and the best of his intellectual power, and it was with an almost measured cadence that his words were brought to the ear of the assembly. Slight were which bound hearts were further wound away, very often was a sob heard in the tenderness of this illicit but passionate and determined love which had been drawn back by the recess of my childhood, to encounter me on I love scarcely dared to find myself, as far as I know, able not only to make reparation, but to enjoy the bliss of a love of which I am unworthy. If I were wise enough, I would not before you the spiritual meaning of this terrible experience, but I am a man. Three years ago I stood here in a harlot confessed and bade you forgiveness of our human life. It is only when we know nothing of life that we feel we are blameless it! Now that I have seen it, I see it clothed in the garb of the degrading accomplices. These facts, however, stand out before me, and I can only lament, pardon! I have sinned; I have suffered. I have been forgiven, I have been fully pardoned, but I feel that I have not been fully punished. There are issues of such an experience as this that cannot be brought to light in a day, a year, perhaps not in a lifetime. Sins of the spirit are, I most await them and meet them; but it is a sensitive nature, than to know sin mind, when he is determined so to do. I know that I have carried upon this sin with humiliation! If God permits me to live worthily, and pursuing purpose you until I have so recruited my spiritual strength that I can stand into the great world of sorrow and of sin and of pain, I may be permitted to serve a lesson of helpfulness such as was attributed to me at the moment of my need; but if there is any one here who has given a message for me, whether it be to appease or condemn my course, I trust that I shall have grace to receive it humbly.

He took his seat, and it seemed to a few moments that every person in the room had yielded heart and judgment to the noble and modest appeal. But there was among them one whose stern and unchastened face of Joshua had not been appeased. He was a man who had often suffered for righteous sake and who attached more value to the testimony of a clear conscience than to any earthly dignity. His steady and solemnity from this form was like that of a prophet of ancient days. His piercing eyes seemed like two bright stars under the cloudy edge of a black thunderhead. His face was emaciated with a self-denial that bordered on monotonous, and was with an eager contemplation of the sufferings of life, the mystery of mortality. Not a trace of tender emotion was evident on his face, which might have been carved in marble. It was impossible to imagine that he had ever been young, and there seemed a noble image in the effort of such a man to judge the cause of a love like that which had found expression in the hearts of David and Deborah, and to promulgate upon the minds of those whose souls were still throbbing with passion.

But such was the purpose of the man. His first words sounded on the stillness like an alarm bell and shook the souls of listening with a sort of terror.

"We did not seek to try this cause," he said. "It was brought before us by the act of this aged man himself. But if we must judge, let us judge. Let David! We read of him—that he lays righteousness to the line and judgment on the plummet. Let us do the same. That a great wrong hath been done is evident to every mind. It is not most that such wrongs should go unpunished. These two transgressors have suffered; but who believes that such wrongs are justly to be soon followed by felicity? It would be an encouragement to evildoers and a pernicious man who? Who would refuse to unite in publicly reading the marriage bonds or sundering any sacred tie? It is a fine sight, indeed, that of the aged dotard who might be taken to be the cause? What accompanies the sin that has followed which has been not superficially graven on this aged heart may not be obliterated by the outpouring of tribunal? Why should not the bonds of life be sundered merely forever? If they are indeed in harmony in such a manner as to be heart the meaning of this experience, which seems to have drawn back here, let them of their own accord and of their own free will, if they prefer divorce a year in meditation and prayer. Let them show to the world that they have learned that to live righteously, and not to cross fingers on pains or enjoy unhallowed pleasures, is the chief end of human life. The hour is ripe for such a demonstration. We have seen other evil-doers among us of an unholy hungering after the unlawful pleasures of life. It is time that a hub were called. If this commonwealth is dedicated to righteousness, let it be seen. We are not in a rut at critical moments like this that we should be a mockery and the—and feel that I must make a confession of my sins."

In the death-like stillness he began. It was not in his nature to be dramatic, but the deep feeling of him who told his natural society and the best of his intellectual power, and it was with an almost measured cadence that his words were brought to the ear of the assembly. Peddlers Get Wage Increase.

The Lehighton Valley Iron Company at Lehighton, Pa., has posted notices increasing the wages of peddlers from $2 to $4.50. Four hundred men are affected.

SAVANNAH IN A FRENZY.

Enraged Citizens Aid Police in Hunt for Murderous Negro.

Savannah, was swept by a dragnet of police officers and enraged citizens when the news got out that was seeking a negro, charged with attack on one woman and the murder of his victim and two women companions in a house in the very heart of the city.

Excitement bidedly about the hall and rooms of their home, Mrs. Eliza Gribble, aged 60 years, and her daughter, Mrs. Harrie Oslander, were found dead early in the afternoon by a policeman, who was attracted by the moans of a third woman, Mrs. Maggie Hunter, aged 32, who died later, with her skull broken in. It is the Savannah Hospital.

As she was used, and physicians say Mrs. Oslander was attacked. A negro woman told, it is said, lived for two days in an outhouse in the rear of the Gribble home, is missing. The murders were most brutal. Mrs. Gribble was killed as she sat in her easy chair reading. Her gray hair is blood-clotted where the ax crashed her skull. Beside her body on the floor were her newspaper and her sewing-bag. One blow, or two at the most, sufficed to end her life. Mrs. Hunter was found by a patrolman as he passed inside the front door. She was probably struck down as she attempted to escape from the house.

In the hope of curbing the murderer of the three women the police dragnet in Tennessee, a negro district, caught 300 negroes. This is only a start, as the police are determined on a search of every negro in any shack resembling the description given of the murderer.

25 LOST IN GAS EXPLOSION.

Fire Following Blast at Hamburg Does Millions Damage.

The explosion of two gas tanks in the so-called "Kleine's Gradewoh," on the Elbe, in Hamburg, Germany, was followed by an extensive fire and the loss of many lives. The explosion was due to a leak in a new gasometer. Escaping gas entered the cellars, where it came in contact with the fires, causing a terrific explosion. Twenty-five of the workmen who were employed near the gasometer disappeared in a mass of flames which shot up to a great height. Firemen could do but little. Nineteen lives are known to have been lost, while four men other workmen are missing. The fire gained rapidly and threatened the old gasometer, containing 50,000 cubic meters. A terrific explosion soon occurred and the tower became a mass of flames, which leaped hundreds of feet. In the city, sending fragments of glowing coke for miles and wide over the city and harbor. The new gasometer which exploded was the largest in the world, having a capacity of 200,000 cubic meters. The city appropriated 14,000,000 marks ($2,500,000) for its construction.

TWO DIE IN FLYER WRECK.

Northwestern Train Jumps Track at Northern Limits of Chicago.

The Chicago and Northwestern Beer No. 5—the 11:30 a. m. limited between Chicago and Milwaukee—while running forty miles an hour jumped the track at one of the sharp curves in and avenue, the boundary line between Chicago and Kenosha. The train was jammed into smithereens, two immigrants were killed, and at least eight passengers injured. The wreck took place in Chicago. The victims were killed in Kenosha. The train jumped the track within the city limits, but in passing the boundary line better death visited the passengers. Just beyond the limits the locomotive, with cab, left the track, ploughed a rail. The rail curled up beneath the locomotive, punctured the floor of the baggage car like a great knife, and slit this car and the one behind it into diminished pieces.

COLD KILLS MEN ON YAWL.

Refugees of Foundered Ferry Found Frozen in Boat.

With her flag at half-mast, the state fisheries boat Commodore Ferry, Capt. Cathy Dybedal, commanding, has brought to Erie, Pa., the dead and frozen bodies of nine of the crew of the Bessemer and Lariquette ferry No. 2, which left Conneaut, Ohio, Tuesday morning carrying thirty-two men and which has probably foundered in the middle of Lake Erie. As the body out on the Ferry sighted a tiny half-sunken yawl orders were given to steam down upon the object. The use of glasses discovered the boat to be loaded with nine men. As the Ferry came abeam of the drifting and half water-logged yawl the men gathered at the side of the fish boat saw that they had arrived too late. The nine occupants of the boat, which was marked "Bessemer and Marquette No. 4," were frozen stiff in death.

35 HURT IN CAR ACCIDENT.

Hit by Pennsylvania Train at Indianapolis and Hurled 30 Feet.

Thirty-five passengers on a street car were injured, none fatally, and five seriously, when the car was struck by an inbound Pennsylvania passenger train at the South Street crossing in Indianapolis and hurled thirty feet. The car fell on a cement sidewalk and lay across the track, but the engineer stopped his train before hitting it, a second time. Most of those hurt were injured in the panic which followed the crash.

Acid Victim's Life Threatened.

THE DEVIL'S PULPIT

GOD'S WHEAT

By Rev. A. B. Hobby

"He will thoroughly purge His floor, and gather His wheat into the garner, but the chaff He will burn with unquenchable fire."—Matt. 3:12.

The statement of John at Bethabara was universally accepted by Jesus when He said: "I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them; but gather the wheat into my barn." There is in both parables the claim of rightful personal ownership. John says: "He will gather His wheat into the garner." Jesus says, "Gather the wheat into My barn."

This assurance then, we are taught with a price and belong to God, is a strong comfort to those who do the flever, and is a truth reiterated again and again. We rely upon the promise of Christ: "Ye are clean" My word, and they follow Me, and I will give unto them eternal life." We firmly trust, with Paul, that "the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, the Lord knoweth them that are His. This security of God's trusts Israel is strongly by the Old Testament in its declaration: "I will stir the hearts of Israel among the nations, and cause it sifted in a sieve; yet shall not "a least grain fall to the earth."

Vitally connected with the fact of God's ownership is another, truth which is always precious to the Christian, the truth of the resurrection, we have by political economy of competition, we have by political economy of co-operation a sapphire, an opal, and a diamond, set in the midst of a sea of pearls.

"The God who has that possibility in an acorn of the dust, can do as much and more with a human soul. When Robert Moffatt, the pioneer missionary of Africa, revisited England, he was welcomed by the Lord Mayor of London, who gave a banquet in his honor at the Mansion House; and having been introduced to the assembled merchants and chief citizens, who were familiar with the African diamond fields, he replied: "I can tell you that little about the diamond fields; for I have never been there. I can tell you that among the lost souls of the darkened races of Africa, that they might be made as jewels to adorn the Saviour's crown."

Let us accept the calming, satisfying grace of God in Christ is to shine the jewels. They shall "Mine in that day when I make up my jewels." He will present in faultless before the presence of His glory exceeding joy. If we are willing, He will burn the chaff out of our lives forever, and He will gather the wheat into His garner for eternity.

HOPE OF THE MASSES.

By Dr. Johnston Eyers.

"Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day and forever." Hebrews 13:8.

"All the world, you know, has a religion which is of any value has been revealed by Jesus Christ. It hath pleased the Father that in Him should all the fulness of God dwell. He is the perfect and final revelation of divine truth. There will never be any discoveries made in spiritual life outside of the life and teachings of Christ. There will, no doubt, be progress, but it will be progress along the lines which the world's Redeemer has already given.

"He has asked for no second place. He has never claimed Himself among the relegated ones. He claims to be I am the Lord, and beside Me there is no other." He is the Lord over all, blessed for evermore." The heavenly hosts bow before Him and ascribe to Him power, wisdom, and strength and power."

"His own words about Himself make His position clear to those who believe the Bible: "I am the Alpha, and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last." Just as every form of life is in Him and in the sun."

DECLINE OF MORALITY.

tags. Some desires to be a blessing to mankind, to be useful, but God's ministers, Sunday school teachers, Christian workers, are not fulfilling the description given of the ministry.

"Finally, the water purifies or quites itself and crystallizes into the shape of a star. And for the cause of mind which we had by political economy of competition, we have by political economy of co-operation a sapphire, an opal, and a diamond, set in the midst of a sea of pearls.

"The God who has that possibility in an acorn of the dust, can do as much and more with a human soul. MILITIA GAINS NOTHING.

Joker Found in New Armory Rental Law.

The new military law passed last winter provides for increasing the amount appropriated to companies for armory rental from $400 to $500 a year, and gives the military board authority to increase this amount to $600. Under the old law, in addition to the rental allowance of $400, each company drew $100 for light and heat, but this fund was not included in the new law, and in consequence companies will continue to draw only $500 a year unless the board finds it wise to authorize the increase.

Charlevoix Sentinel
WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR

ROADS, WEEDS AND THINGS

A Characteristic Letter From Our Own Original George H. VanPatt.

CHICAGO, ILL., Dec. 16, 1899.

To the Editor of the Sentinel SENTINEL:

MY DEAR WILLARD,—It is now nearly twenty six years since you and I first met, and there are a few still living in Charlevoix who are familiar with the introduction you gave me to Dr. Cronister at that time.

During these years, you have generously given spals, by many letters from me, principally regarding Good Roads, Noxious Weeds, Tree Planting, Farmers Friendly Assn., etc., and from the fact that the roads have not improved as they should have done for the large amount of money expended on them, also because where there was one weed twenty-six years ago, there are about ten thousand now; that instead of planting trees and having a row on both sides of the road, the few trees that were left to grow have been ruthlessly cut down, and any and everything under three or four inches has been treated as rubbish and cut down, consequently, my letters, I think, have been of mighty small avail.

Last summer about half way between Norwood and Charlevoix, I was taking some friends home with me, we came across a number of nice, young elms and maples that were from four to six inches in diameter that had just been cut down. A lady in the party exclaimed, "Oh, how shameful to see those nice, young trees so wantonly destroyed! I then called her attention to the worst of all—over man had saved a few nice trees, but for fear they might grow, had piled all the trees and undergrowth where he had just cut down under these nice trees, so that when dry they could be easily burned, and of course, this would also kill the trees he had intended to save, and this performance is a very common one in our country. Now, what I am going to write about, in my opinion, is worth more than all the rest of the stuff I have ever written in regard to roads, trees, weeds, etc., and this is about the fruit grown in Northwestern Michigan, and the work done by the West Michigan Development Bureau.

It is really a shame that more people did not come from our part of the country to see the Land and Fruit Exhibit, recently held at the Coliseum in this city. They, virtually, would have gone home with long feathers in their hats, singing "A Farmer for Every Forty. Hurrah for Michigan, as Her Fruit Exhibit Beat Everything There was at this Show."

I cannot tell you how many people, but a great many, I asked, "Have you been to the Fruit and Land show? Well how about the Fruit Exhibit?" and the same general reply was given, "Why Michigan has got them all skunked to the finish. Michigan had the real stuff, you could bottle it, you could smell of it, you could feel it in the air" and you could hear the enthusiasm all over the Coliseum. 'Don't fail to see the Michigan exhibit."

"It is a lunch."

"Don't it beat—, no, the west? Yes, and New York feels."

By the way, one gentleman asked, "Have you seen the fellow who talks so much?"

"He fellow? No, but I have heard the twin bother."

"Twins?"

"Yes, the twins."

"Why twins, who are the twins anyway?"

"Why, don't you know Rowe and Payne? You ought to know them. Everybody talks about them. Well, if they didn't, they get acquainted with them before they left."

"Say," said one fellow, "you ought to see what a nice, smart lick the twins played. They got two Wolf River apples from different sections of the western country, and one from Northern Michigan, all three about the same size, and approaching a little group asked one of them if there was an expert apple grower there. They all handled the apples, looked wise, smelled them, and finally one fellow said, 'I guess this is from the state of C., this one from the state of W. and this one I know, is from Michigan.' 'Prove up, old man, tell us how you know?' 'Smell all three of these apples, and see whether you notice any difference in the odors, or aroma, as we would say in Boston. Everybody proceeded to do so, and the result was, he was correct.'

Now, Willard, I am not going to write any more about fruit, but you just tell all the nabobs farmers up in our country who are talking about going west to grow up with the country, to go. Do not discourage them; I have tried that many a time. They will go anyway, and then they will come back, providing they can get the money, and when they get back, will be satisfied with a forty and will make something out of this forty, which they did not do out of their old one-hundred-and sixty.

The fact is, our county, Charlevoix county, is in it. It is IT. The medals Payton had to show down there for the premium at the St. Louis Fair helped the matter along a little, and the day is not far distant when the Grand Traverse county will be the great fruit growing belt of the United States.

Why? Because it is only a night ride from the big markets, the fruit has the flavor; it stands the transportation and storage, and does not have to be packed in patent boxes or cotton. Throw it in anyway; it is sure to get there, as a certain young lady said when Rowe insisted on her eating the whole of a rotten pound apple.

Another thing, land can be bought for from ten to twenty-five dollars an acre, as we all know, and the good Lord waters it freely, so what is the use of going west, paying $1000 an acre, and depending on some old irrigation ditch to supply you with water, which is liable to take a turn, some night, and go in the opposite direction.

Success to the great fruit growing counties, Northern Michigan, and to Charlevoix in particular.

Yours Very Truly,
GEORGE H. VANPATT.

Governmental Inconsistencies.

The secretary of war lately transmitted to congress reports of the army engineers bearing vitality upon harbor projects in Michigan, and the report reveals the fact that even army engineers make mistakes. The chief of engineers lifts White Lake harbor between the eyes. After Congress has spent more than $100,000 upon it, the engineers say this harbor is not only unworthy of a channel depth of 20 feet with a turning basin, but that it ought not to be maintained, even in its present condition.

The alleged lightness of traffic and proximity of Muskegon are given as reasons.

Charlevoix harbor, which means Pine Lake and its Arm, can show up cargoes more than the entire of any harbor on this side of Muskegon, yet not more than half of $100,000 has been expended on its improvement. This year the money cut as out entirely in his estimates for next year, with ore and lumber taken steamers grounding in the upper channel five hundred at a time.

The chief of engineers also reports adversely on a harbor at Frankfort, but Congressman Diekema, Dem., Chairman of the committee on rivers and harbors, reported that this harbor was really unusually safe and that Congress was not even much agitated in favor of Frankfort as a breakwater.

Rich Men's Grievance Poor

Inside this: "I want to go on record as saying that I regard Electric Bitters as one of the greatest gifts that God has made to woman," writes Mrs. O. Graessmann, of Yorkville, Center, N. Y. "I can never forget what it has done for me." This glorious medicine gives a woman long-and sparkling vigor of body and brilliant health. It quickly cures nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, headache, backache, fainting and dizzy spells, soon builds up the weak, ailing and sickly. Try them. Sold at F. G. Hines & Co.

Health and Money.

"There is a difference between these two temporal blessings, health and money. Money is the most envied but the least enjoyed. Health is the most enjoyed but the least envied, and the superiority of the latter is still more obvious when we reflect that the poorest man would not part with health for money but the richest would gladly part with most money for health, and invest. People are paying more attention to health matters than they used to. They understand diseases better also. That is why Chiropractic is coming to the front so rapidly. The people demand it. Chiropractic's power of strength has in the past been what people can understand. If you are trembling for health go and talk to Dr. L. E. Linn, Chiropractor, 108 Park Ave., and you will find that his explanation of its principles appeals to your reason. 29-35

CANNOT FOOL THE NEWS

Perry Powers Analysis the Publicity Bureau Dope.

The Evening News is being generously remembered these days by the Michigan Publicity Bureau, an organization formed in Detroit for the purpose of opposing local option. By almost every mail comes some further secret fiscal discovery that goes to show that local option is leading to the larger consumption of beer and whiskey, so the Michigan Publicity Bureau tells us, and yet the manufacturers of beer and whiskey are growing more frantic in their desire to stop the progress of local option sentiment. That increase in consumption of beer and whiskey story is a good one, it is too easy to show its entire absurdity. The growth of local option sentiment will never even hesitate over that statement. Better stick to the recital of the "awful increase of drinking by little boys." How little boys who never drank before get away from home at night and stay away and just gorge themselves with whiskey in city cities. This story is told with more effect. It isn't true, but some people can be persuaded to believe it, and nobody believes the larger consumption story. Why the closing up of the saloons and making it a criminal offense to sell liquor should start a whole herd of little boys after whiskey who would not have wanted it and couldn't have got it if the saloons had been wide open day and night, is not easy to understand. Let that's the way its told, and told in all dry cities and told often in order to get the full benefit of reputation. Therefore, we would suggest to the Michigan Publicity Bureau that it is discard its declaration as to the larger consumption of liquor in dry territory. It's a little harder to prove the lie as to the story of the little boys and then the persons telling it can always assume to share your regret that because it is true the saloons must be brought back again as a desperate remedy to save the little boys.—Public News.

Northern Michigan

Antrim county in the period since 1850 has multiplied its population more than eighty five times."

J. H. Ogletree, a pioneer of Antrim county, died at his home in Central Lake one day last week.

A Central Lake man sold this season ten of extracted honey and 600 pounds of cuke the product of 30 hives from ten weeks work.

Judd E. Houghton, formerly of East Jordan, and well known throughout the north, has leased the Imperial hotel at Bay City, and will personally manage that popular hostelry.

The annual general meeting of the state grange will be held in Traverse City, so an overwhelming majority was in favor of coming here when the vote was taken. The vote stood on the first ballot, Traverse City, 215; Kalamazoo, 16; Bay City, 28; Alpena, 19; Ludington, 6; Saint Ste. Marie, 26; Menominee, 31.

Traverse City Eagle: One of the chief attractions of the state grange is the exhibits of the products of Northern Michigan shown in labor hall. As you enter the hall you see row upon row of apples extending the length of the hall, Charlevoix county making a showing of over 50 boxes and the rest of the show being made by the Development Bureau. Charlevoix also has a big display of grains, seeds, potatoes and vegetables. D. S. Payton, Charlevoix's county clerk, and Martin Heming, master of Peninsula grange of this county are on hand talking Charlevoix county all the time.

Hope Journal: The death of John H. Corwin occured at the home of his son, Arthur Corwin, 523 Groveland avenue, last night at eleven o'clock. The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon o'clock at the Baptist church and was conducted by Rev. Frank Bink, the baptist pastor. The interment was at the Horton's Bay cemetery. Mr. Corwin was born in Syracuse, N. Y., and was aged 74 years, seven months and six days. He was a veteran of the Civil war, being a member of Company B, Seventh Illinois Cavalry, serving four years. He was an early settler here, moving up a homestead near Holland in 1866. He lived the past 28 years in his resident in Iowa and returned to visit his son last June but was stricken with heart trouble soon after his arrival.

The Deer's Eyes.

A Canadian hunter tells this incident of how he once came face to face with his quarry and failed to fire the shot. "Yes, "It wasn't a case of 'buck fever,' such as a novice might expect to cause, for I had been a hunter for many years and had killed a good many deer. This was a particularly fine buck that I had followed for three days. A strong snow was run my deer to earth in time, and at last I had my prey sized out. From the top of a hill I sighted him a few miles away. He had given up his fight and had stretched himself out on the snow. As I stalked him he changed his position and took shelter behind a bowlder, and, using the same bowlder for a shelter, I came suddenly face to face with him. He didn't attempt to run away, but stood there looking at me with the most piteous pair of eyes I ever saw.

"Shoot? I could have no more shot him than I could have shot a child. Had the choice come from a thousand or a hundred yards I would have shot him down, and carried his antlers home in triumph, but once having looked into those eyes it would have been nothing less than murder. I have hunted deer since then, but I find the sport affords me little pleasure. Where ever I draw a bead the picture of those mute, appealing eyes comes before me, and though it has not prevented me from pulling the trigger, I have always felt glad somehow when my bullet failed to find its mark.

A Common Freak.

When D. T. Barnum was in the museum business in New York one of his most jovial friends was Gaylord Clark, a famous literatur in the days of our fathers. They were a well matched pair of practical jokers. One day when Mr. Clark dropped in at the museum, he was his custom, Mr. Barnum, apparently much excited, hurried his friend into the private office and exclaimed, "Gaylord, I was about to send for you. I want your advice. I have a chance to purchase the most wonderful of all zoological freaks. It's at first a perfect fish, then it changes to a large legged hand animal, then it climbs from and"

"Hold! You're joking," interjected Mr. Clark.

"On my honor I am not," impressively replied the showman. "But the experiment"

"Oh, hang the expense!" interrupted Mr. Clark, letsafed of enthusiasm over the business project of his friend. "If you can get any such freak as that your fortune is made. But what's the thing called?"

"Well," replied Mr. Barnum, with the proud reflection of a benefactor of his fellow kind, "I think I shall call it the betrachian family of animals and to the vermicular is called the—the—tadpole!"

"Gentleman Adventurers."

"Adventurer" is a word, once highly respectable, that has degenerated with the lapse of time. It was once a compliment to call a gentleman an adventurer, and the Merchant Venturers of Bristol, England, are still respectable. The Hudson's Bay Company dates back from May 2, 1670. In the royal charter it was described as the "Governor and Company of Adventurers of England Trading in Hudson's Bay."

Her Disappointment.

An Atchison girl believed she had been engaged to a medium. She got convinced, drank vinegar three times in one day and tried to swallow formal dehyde, and had her home fumigated. Later she discovered that it was all a mistake and that she hasn't been engaged, she had a big, long cry. She was disappointed.—Atchison Globe.

Too Harsh.

"Overheard woman! you took advantage of my absence to send my husband." "Pardon me, but is it exactly manly to speak of your husband as an agreeable visit, carried away with her same trifling thing in my and then to the poor angel to tender of carding little tor?"—Life.

The Cynics.

Cynics was the name applied to a school of philosophers founded by Antisthenes, a pupil of Socrates. The name took of the Greek epithet which that civilization is a curse, and true happiness can be obtained only by gratifying the most primary physical appetites which man has in common with the brutes. The general attitude of the cynics as distinguished from that of the stoics, who regarded everything in the external world with indifference, was one of contempt. They were not an important philosophical school numerically, nor attracted attention largely by their eccentricities and insolence. On account of their contempt for refinement their name came subsequently to be applied to any one who takes a sneer view of human life.—New York American.

Remarkable Offer to Readers of The Charlevoix Sentinel
The Biggest Bargain you Were Ever Permitted to Enjoy.
The SENTINEL has arranged with The Grand Rapids Herald to give our readers the benefit of The Herald's remarkably attractive bargain Day offer for 1900. This is a rare opportunity for the newspaper readers of this vicinity and The SENTINEL expects to see a splendid response.
For two weeks, from December 18 to January 1, by bringing or sending $1.50 we can give you one full year's subscription to The SENTINEL, The Grand Rapids Daily Herald, The Orange Judd Farmer, and Uncle Remus' Home Magazine. You can transact all the business right here in our office. We can secure the entire combination for you. It gives you your great home paper, The SENTINEL and these other great periodicals for the trivial cost of $1.50. It is a privilege not to be overlooked.
"We will send you The Grand Rapids Daily Herald—the premier daily newspaper of Western Michigan whose price alone at any other time is a dollar $2.50 for one full year. We will send you The Orange Judd Farmer—a weekly farm journal, which, since 1842, has been the premier farm weekly of the middle west—for one full year. We will send you Uncle Remus' Home Magazine—a great monthly magazine, which is today the nation's popular favorite—for one full year.
Remember these dates. Bring your money to the office of The SENTINEL. We will see that you secure the full value of the entire combination. Don't pass it up. It's a mighty big bargain.

THE DIGESTION.

Treatment That Will Be Found Many Helpful Under Certain Conditions.

Digestion is seldom improved by the taking of medicines, declares an old family physician. We all know plenty of old bodies of both sexes who have taken medicine enough to heat a battleship—taken it as a sort of pious duty." he says, "but those old bodies hang on to life in spite of their dosing, not through it.

"A large glass of hot water taken in the morning directly after rising and cleaning the teeth are worth all the aperient mixtures in the world. The juice of one or two oranges, taken as long before breakfast as possible, is excellent for cleaning out the digestive tract and giving the system a fillip. It is well to follow the morning job with two minutes or so of exercises which will stimulate the stomach and liver. Stand upright, with the hands above the head, then bend down, keeping the knees straight, until the tips of the fingers touch the floor. Repeat this eight times, then put the hands on the hips and bend from side to side. This massages the liver and stimulates the digestion. For breakfast eat porridge and brown bread and some fruit. Prunes are the best. If there is a tendency to costiveness, a glass of water taken just before going to bed is excellent for passing out the stomach and keeping the digestion in order."—New York Tribune.

NAPHTHA.

The Natural Products and Those Obtained From Petroleum.

Naphtha is an inflammable liquid which exudes from the soil in certain parts of Persia. Subsequently the use of the term appears to include some volatile oils found in Europe and even America. The product of the oil fields of southern Russia is usually called naphtha, although it differs in no way from the ordinary grades of petroleum.

Naphtha properly includes the lighter oils which, passed first in the distillation of petroleum, the gravities ranging from 50 to 62 degrees Beaume. Dowmytsinski reports oil contains from 8 to 20 per cent of naphtha. In

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR

ROADS, TREES AND THINGS

A Characteristic Letter From Our Own Original George H. VanPelt.

CHICAGO, ILL., Dec. 16, 1909.

To the Editor of the Charlevoix SENTINEL.

MY DEAR WILLARD,—It is now nearly twenty-six years since you and I first met, and there are a few still living in Charlevoix who are familiar with the introduction you gave me to Dr. Crouter at that time.

During those years, you have generously given space to many letters from me, principally regarding Good Roads, Noxious Weeds, Tree Planting, Farmers Friendly Assn., etc., and from the facts that the roads have not improved as they should have done for the large amount of money expended on them, also because where there was one weed, twenty-six years ago, there are about ten thousand now, that instead of planting trees and having a row on both sides of the road, the few trees that were left to grow have been ruthlessly cut down, and any sort everything under three or four inches has been treated to exhibit and cut down, consequently, my letters, I think, have been of mighty small avail.

Last summer about half way between Norwood and Charlevoix, as I was taking some friends home with me, we came across a number of nice, young elms and maples that were from four to six inches in diameter that had just been cut down. A lady in the party exclaimed, "Oh, how shameful to see those nice, young trees so ruthlessly destroyed!" I then called her attention to the worst of all,—one man had saved a few nice trees, but for fear they might grow, had piled all the trees and underbrush which he had just cut down under these nice trees, so that when dry they could be easily burned, and of course, this would also kill the trees he had intended to save, and this performance is a very common one in our country. Now, what I am going to write about, in my opinion, is worth more than all the rest of the stuff I have ever written in regard to roads, trees, weeds, etc., and this is about the fruit growing in Northwestern Michigan, and the work done by the West Michigan Development Bureau.

It is really a shame that more people did not come from our part of the country to see the Land and Fruit Exhibit, recently held at the Coliseum in this city. They virtually would have gone home with long feathers in their hats, singing "A Farmer for Every Forty. Hurrah for Michigan, and Her Fruit Exhibit Beat Everything There was at the Show."

I cannot tell you how many people, but a great many, I asked, "Have you been to the Fruit and Land Show? Well how about the Fruit Exhibit?" and the same general reply was given, "Why Michigan has got 'em all stowed to the finish. Michigan had the real stuff, you could handle it, you could smell of it, you could feel it in the air and you could hear the exclamation all over the Coliseum, 'Don't fail to see the Michigan exhibit.'"

"It is a dandy."

"Don't it beat——no, the west? Yes, and New York fruit."

By the way, one gentleman asked, "Have you seen the fellow who talks so much?"

"The fellow? No, but I have heard the twins holler."

"Twins?"

"Yes, the twins."

"Why twins, who are the twins anyway?"

"Why, that 'you know Rowe and Powers' You pretend to know them. Everybody did that went to the show. If they didn't, they got acquainted with them before they left."

"Say!" said my informant—"you ought to see what a nice, smart trick the twins played. They got two Wolf River apples from different sections of the western country, one from Northern Michigan, and three about the same size, and approaching a little group asked one of them if there was any expert apple grower there. They all handled the apples, looked wise, smelled them, and finally one fellow said, 'I guess this is from the state of C, who, one from the state of W, and this one, I know, is from Michigan.' 'Pro'p up, old man, tell us how you know' 'Smell at these of three apples and see whether you notice any difference in the color, or aroma, as we would say in Boston. Everybody proceeded to do so, and the result was, he was correct.'"

Now, Willard, I am not going to write any more about fruit, but you just tell all the imitation farmers up in our country who are talking about going west to grow up with the country, to go. Do not discourage them; I have tried that many a time. They will go anyway, and then they will come back, providing they can get the money, and when they get back, will be satisfied' with a forty and will make something out of this forty, which they did not do out of their old one-hundred-and sixty.

The fact is, our county, Charlevoix county, is in it. It is IT. The medals Payton had to show down there for the premiums at the St. Louis Fair helped the matter along too, and the day is not far distant when the Grand Traverse county will be the great fruit growing belt of the United States.

Why? Because it is only a night ride from the big markets; the fruit has the flavor; it stands the transportation and storage, and does not have to be packed in patent boxes or cotton. Throw it in anyway; it is sure to stay there, as a certain young lady said when Rowe insisted on her eating the whole of a 1 1-4 pound apple.

Another thing, land can be bought for from ten to twenty-five dollars an acre, as we all know, and the good Lord waters it freely, so what is the use of going west, paying $1000 an acre, and depending on some old irrigation ditch to supply you with water, which is liable to take a turn, some night, and go in the opposite direction.

Success to the great fruit growing country, Northern Michigan, and to Charlevoix in particular.

Yours Very Truly,
GEORGE H. VAN PELT.

Governmental Inconsistencies.

The secretary of war lately transmitted to congress reports of the army engineers bearing vitally upon harbor projects in Michigan, and the report reveals the fact that even army engineers make mistakes. The chief of engineers bits White Lake harbor for seven times. After Uncle Sam has spent more than $400,000 upon it, the engineers say this harbor is not only unworthy of a channel depth of 20 feet with a turning basin, but that it ought not to be maintained, even in its present condition.

One alleged lightness of traffic and proximity of Muskegon are given as reasons.

Charlevoix harbor, which means Pine Lake and its dune, can show up a tonnage far in excess of any harbor this side of Muskegon, yet not more than half of $400,000 has been expended for its protection. This year the engineers say this harbor is not only unworthy of a channel depth of 20 feet with a turning basin, but that it ought not to be maintained, even in its present condition.

CANNOT FOOL THE NEWS

Fern Powers Analysis the Publicity Bureau Dope.

The Evening News is being generously remembered three days by the Michigan Publicity Bureau, an organ recently formed in Detroit for the purpose of opposing local option. By at least every mail comes some further scare-head discovery that goes to show that local option is leading to the longer consumption of beer and whiskey, or the Michigan Publicity Bureau tells us, said yet the manufacturers of beer and whiskey are growing more frantic in their desire to stop the progress of local option sentiment. That increase in consumption of beer and whiskey story is not a good one, it is too easy to show its entire absurdity. The growth of local option sentiment will never even hesitate over that statement. Better stick to the recital of the "awful increase of drinking by little boys." How little boys who never drank before get away from home at night and stay away and just gorge themselves with whiskey in dry cities. This story is told with more effect. It isn't true but some people can be persuaded to believe it, and nobody believes the larger consumption story. Why the Colling up of all the saloons and making it a criminal offense to sell liquor should start a whole herd of little boys after whiskey who would not have wanted it and couldn't have got it if the saloons had been wide open days and nights, is too easy to understand, but that's the way its told, and told in all dry cities and told often in order to get the full benefit of repetition. Therefore, we would suggest to the Michigan Publicity Bureau that it is directed its declamation as to the larger consumption of liquor in dry territory as an anti-local option appeal and confine itself to telling of little boys who just can't be kept from drinking in dry territory. It's harder to prove the lie as to the story of the little boys and then the person telling it can always assume to share your regret that because it is true the saloons must be brought back again as a desperate remedy to save the little boys.—Cadillac News.

Northern Michigan

Antrim county in the period since 1890 has multiplied its population more than eighty five times.

J. H. Oglebree, a pioneer of Antrim county, died at the home in Central Lake one day last week.

A Central Lake man sold this season a ton of extracted honey and 600 pounds of comb the product of 30 hives from ten weeks work.

John H. Houghton, formerly of East Jordan, and well known throughout the north, has leased the Imperial hotel at Bay City, and will personally manage that popular hostelry.

The next annual meeting of the state grange will be held in Traverse City, as an overwhelming majority was in favor of coming back when the vote was taken. The vote stood on the first ballot: Traverse City, 215; Kalamazoo, 16; Bay City, 28; Alpena, 18; Ludington, 6; Sault Ste. Marie, 36; Menominee, 31.

Traverse City Eagle: One of the chief attractions of the state grange is the exhibits of the products of Northern Michigan shown in labor hall. As you enter the hall you see row upon row of apples extending the length of the hall. Charlevoix county making a showing of over 50 barrels and the rest of the show being made by the Development Bureau. Charlevoix also has a big display of grain, seeds, potatoes and vegetables. D. S. Dayton, Charlevoix county clerk, and Martin Runting, master of Peninsula grange of that county are on hand taking Charlevoix county all the time.

Boyne Journal: The death of John H. Corwin occurred at the home of his son, Arthur Corwin, 523 Grove street avenue, last night at eleven o'clock. The funeral was held Wednesday at ten o'clock at the Baptist church and was conducted by Rev. Frank Bair, the Baptist pastor. The interment was at the Horton's Bay cemetery. Mr. Corwin was born in Syracuse, N. Y., and was aged 64 years, seven months and six days. He was a veteran of the Civil war, being a member of Company B, Seventh Illinois Cavalry, serving four years. He was an early settler here, taking up a homestead near Horton's Bay in 1866. For the past 28 years he has resided in Iowa and returned to visit his son last June but was stricken with heart trouble soon after his arrival.

The Deer's Eyes.

A Canadian hunter tells this incident of late occurrence in his camp with his squaw and habit the beast in his "It wasn't a case of buck fever," such as a novice might experience, for I had been a hunter for many years and killed a good many deer. This was a particularly fine buck, that I had followed for three days. A strong man can run any deer to earth in time, and I had my prey tired out. From the top of a hill I sighted him a few miles away. He had given up the fight and had stretched himself out on the snow. As I stalked him he changed his position and took shelter behind a boulder, and, using the same boulder for a shelter, I came suddenly face to face with him. He didn't attempt to run away, but stood there looking at me with the most piteous pair of eyes I ever saw.

"Shoot! I could have no more shot him than I could have shot a child. And the chance came from a distance of a hundred yards. I would have shot him down and carried the antlers home in triumph but once having looked into those eyes it would have been nothing less than murder. I have hunted deer since then, but I find the sport affords me little pleasure. Whenever I draw a bead the picture of those mournful appealing eyes comes before me, and, though it has not prevented me from pulling the trigger, I have always felt that somehow when my bullet failed to find its mark."

A Common Freak.

When P. T. Barnum was in the museum business in New York one of his most jovial friends was Stephen Carle, a famous Bitterer in the days of our fathers. They were a well matched pair of practical jokers. One day when Mr. Clark dropped in at the museum, as was his custom, Mr. Barnum, apparently much excited, hurried his friend into the private office and said: "Stayland, I was about to send for you. I want your advice. I have a chance to purchase the most wonderful of all zoological freaks. It's at first a perfect fish, then it changes to a four-legged bird animal, then it climbs from sand."

"What! You're joking," interjected Mr. Clark.

"On my honor I am not," impressively replied the showman. "But the expense?"

"Oh, bang the expense!" interrupted Mr. Clark, brimful of enthusiasm over the business project of his friend. "If you can get any such fresh as that your fortune's made. But what's the thing called?"

"Well," replied Mr. Barnum, with great the fabulous suggestion of a twinkle in his left eye, "it seems to be a bufrachin family of animals and in the vernacular is called the—the—codfish."

Rapid Work of Printers.

"Gentleman Adventurers."

"Adventurer" is a word, once highly opprobrious, that has degenerated with the lapse of time. It was once a contemptuous term applied to gamblers, sharpers, and the Merchant Venturers of Bristol, England, are still frequently so called. Barnum, in his autobiography, says that in 1850 the word "adventurer" was described as the "forwarder and Company of Adventurers of England" trading in Hudson's Bay.

Her Disappointment.

An elderly maiden lady who had been exposed to smallpox. She got vaccinated, drank vinegar three times a day and took a large dose of formaldehyde, and had her house fumigated before, when she learned that it was all a mistake and that she hadn't been exposed, she had a little cry. She was disappointed.—Atchison Globe.

Too Harsh.

"Wretched weather! you took advantage of my hospitality to steal my umbrella," remarks one friend in a mostly scolding where a guest, wishing a convenient or an agreeable visit, can do away with the same offering thus to hint her hostess gives every token of being little fond of him.

Ought to Help Her.

A Philadelphia girl who stole money for her lover offers to work 12 years to pay back the amount. We think that the lover ought to help atone and that she would be able to marry in ten years at least.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

THE DIGESTION.

Treatment That Will Be Found More Helpful Than Medicine.

Digestion is seldom improved by the taking of medicine, doctors and old family physicians. "We all know plenty of old bottles of bath salts who have taken medicine enough to float a battleship—take it as a sort of piece dish," he says. "We done old bodies hang on to life in spite of their doing, not through the aid of medicine, but in spite of it. The Dutch of one of the counties where as long before breakfast as possible, is evident for cleaning out the digestive tract and giving the appetite a fillip. It is well to follow the morning tub with ten minutes or so of exercises which will stimulate the stomach and liver. Hand upward, with the hands above the head, then bend down, keeping the knees straight, so that the tips of the fingers touch the floor. Repeat this eight times, then put the hands on the hips and bend from side to side. This massages the liver and stimulates the digestion. For breakfast eat porridge and brown bread and some fruit. Prunes are the best if there is a tendency to constipation. A glass of water taken just before going to bed is excellent for flushing out the stomach and keeping the digestion in order."—New York Tribune.

NAPHTHA.

The Natural Product's and Those Obtained From Petroleum.

Naphtha is an inflammable liquid which exudes from the soil in certain parts of Persia. Subsequently the use of the term spread to include some volatile oils found in Europe and North America. The product of the oil fields of southern Russia is usually called petroleum although it differs in no way from the ordinary crudes of petroleum.

Naphtha properly speaking is the light oils which pass off first in the distillation of petroleum, the gravities ranging from 90 to 62 degrees Baume. Petroleum crude oil contains from 8 to 20 per cent of naphtha. In the refining of such naphtha several products are obtained by fractional distillation. These which pass off first—namely, rhigolene, gasoline and ligroin—are at ordinary temperatures and for some seldom saved. The next product is known as benzoline, a material largely used in machines and for illuminating purposes. Then comes the refined naphtha and gas naphtha, the latter being the base of much of the illuminating gas now made.

The term naphtha is often treated with camphorates to deodorize it. Naphtha also may be made in the distillation of wood and coal tar.—New York American.

A Medical Removal.

A mass of petrified wood was used to fire on the boats of the Andonscoggin river Maine for the first distillation. But often after the smoke of night had fallen the squire might have been seen struggling home so many that he apparently could not sight a shallop, to say nothing of a hair. One night when he was drunker than usual he staggered over the bridge and fell down and could not find it. Realizing that he was lost and drifting into unfamiliar regions, he called on a boat to ask for information. "Madam," he gravely said to the lady who came to the door, "can I stand, 'cos you tell me I can't stand on this floor?"

"Certainly," she said and gave him full directions. But as he talked he noticed and so he left quite abruptly brought out the features of the man before her in the moonlight and ran into her face, and she finally said, "But isn't this Bailey Brook?"

"Madam," replied the lawyer, assuming a judicial air, "that is entirely duly immaterial."

Resist Melancholy.

Never give way to melancholy. Resist it steadily, for the habit will soon crouch. I once gave a lady two and twenty years ago a prescription which one was a bright fire, another to remember all the pleasant things said to her during the day, to keep a box of sugar plums on the chimney piece and a kettle simmering on the box. I thought this mere trifling at the moment, but have to refer its discovered how true it is that these little pleasures often banish melancholy better than higher or more exalted objects, that an object sight to be thought too trifling to talk about is often the cure of the miseries of others.—Sydney Smith.

BREAD SHEETING.

The Sun Dried Dough of the Land of the Pyramids.

In the land of the pyramids unleavened dough is formed into a large sheet the size of a cooked bread sheeting in shape and consistency, it looks like so much chamois leather and is of exactly the same color. It is moulded entirely of flour and the expressed juice of sultana raisins. It is cleanly to handle and can be swapped up to the hand without fracture.

This bread sheeting is a most important article of interior commerce, yet it must remain unknown among the Arabs for feats and manners. It use for thousands of years from their established bread, crockery and cotton will be gone.

The bread sheeting is used in the countries of origin as either articles of furniture and furnishing, just as the natives of the country make a bewildering variety of uses of the cocoanut palm and its products, as sun blinds, awnings, burgees, cushions for bedding papers and so on through a dozen uses. In their dry climates these uses are practicable, but in rainy seasons the goods if worked collapse like paper almost.

Even in Manitoba among the Indian tankers you see the peculiar traits which hardtack bread inside in big rounded sheets around a yurt serving much to do duty as temporary shelving. It will not stand much weight, but is used for drying out light articles, as the air strikes the sheets both from below and above.—Bakers' Weekly.

Wistaliones and Homes.

The particular causes of atomic swell in Wistaliones are not known, such as rocks, lutrus, sculpture, etc., are hard, and yet they swell so much that they readily wear down the hardest steel. They are varieties of stone derived from agrillaceous schists of the palaeozoic. These stones are found in Italy, Bohemia, Peru and the Hum mountains, in Sicily, in the United States, Spain, Sweden and Siberia. One of the best Anwelson stones for house cones from Arkansas.

DIE IN TENEMENT FIRE

Sleeping Families Trapped in Burning Building in Cincinnati.

At least seven lives were lost and scores more injured in a tenement house fire at 327 and 329 East Third street, Cincinnati. The building is a four-story structure with tenements on every floor except the first. The hallways are lighted by kerosene lamps, and in some way the lamp on the second floor was upset and in a few seconds the entire lower part of the building was ablaze. The blaze shot upward, making it impossible for the tenants to get out by way of the stairs. Some of them jumped out of the windows and were badly hurt. There were fifty people in the house at the time.

The first fireman to reach the scene saved several persons from the rear of the burning building. One captain worked down two dead bodies on the ladder and several others were found huddled together on the fourth floor.

While the fire was still burning it was estimated that fully half of the fifty occupants of the tenements were either dead or badly injured. The bodies taken to the morgue were so badly burned that identification was impossible.

A neighbor who visited the Crumanie home in the evening and inquired of the mother discovered went to the river and discovered a hole in the ice and the sled floating in the water. Further search resulted in finding the bodies.

SAY COOK'S POLE DATA IS A FAKE AND FRAUD

Landsman and Veteran Navigator Swear They Made All of Doctor's Records for Him.

SAY DOCTOR FAILED TO PAY

Were to Have Received $4,000—Got Only $200 on Account Before Explorer Disappeared.

"The New York Times publishes affidavits from Captain August W. Loose, who says he is a pilot and navigator of ocean-going steamships, and George H. Dunkle, an insurance broker, who claims to have been hired by Dr. Frederick A. Cook to supply books and charts whereby his data and observations in the arctic were to be so "doctored" that they would be accepted by the University of Copenhagen. Dr. Cook's friends in New York said that the explorer had met Mr. Dunkle once, and that he was so pestered by him that when he called a second time he sent word that he could not see him. The affidavits in effect are that Dr. Cook engaged the two men to "fake" the report he has submitted to Copenhagen, promising them $4,000 for the job; that he paid them $200 and then disappeared.

"The story told by the Times in part follows: "Captain Loose describes at length how, working backward from the pole, he calculated observations that would fit in with Cook's narrative, and consulted him on the necessary modifications of the latter—as for example that he must be sure to record that he was before 87 degrees on a certain morning because it was at that hour that a certain star mentioned in one of Loose's calculations would be visible.

"Mr. Dunkle describes the inception of the enterprise; how from the newspapers they gathered that Dr. Cook was in deep water and inferred that he would be glad to pay for help; how Dunkle and John R. Bradley, Cook's backer, to introduce him; how the subject was but up so delicately and the bargain finally struck and carried out and how, at last, Dr. Cook disappeared, after accepting their work and paying only $200 for it.

"Both Captain Loose and Mr. Dunkle tell of a visit in the shop of John Bliss & Co. at 128 Front street a few days after the captain's first talk with the explorer, at the Waldorf-Astoria, and of purchasing for Dr. Cook various nautical and astronomical works, besides three charts of Smith Sound and the polar regions, Robert Flight, who sold the books and charts, told a reporter of the Times that he recalled the visit and that the purchases were made as described.

"Captain Loose, in his statement, says he stayed at the Cranmoor Hotel from Nov. 16 to Nov. 19, working out observations for Dr. Cook and that he and Dunkle had frequent conference. Mr. Dunkle went with him on Nov. 16, leaving the next day. He and Captain Loose having connecting rooms Nos. 126 and 128, Mr. Dunkle registering for them. The register shows the arrival on Nov. 16 of George H. Dunkle and "Andrew" Lewis" the fictitious name agreed upon for Captain Loose.

"Captain Loose says he remained secluded in his room during his stay at the hotel so as to run no chance of having the doctor found out. All the time he worked hard on the polar calculations, giving them to Dr. Cook as they were completed. On the last day of his stay at the hotel, Captain Loose says, he gave Dr. Cook the final set of observations he had made for him and the doctor thanked him profusely, declaring that he now felt confident that his records would be accepted at Copenhagen.

The Times is careful to explain that it does not know whether Dr. Cook adopted the "observations" of Captain Loose.

DATA ON POSTAL BANKS.

Compteroller Shows Growth of Such Deposits in Foreign Countries.

In the annual report of Comptroller of the Currency, Lawrence O. Murray, there is a comprehensive table of the growth of postal savings banks the world over which serves to emphasize the need for such banks in the United States. The table shows that thirty-four countries or colonies have such banks and that, during the last decade, the number of depositors in these banks have increased from 25,132,857 to 46,220,203, or nearly 100 per cent, while during the same period the deposits have increased from $1,139,411,941 to $4,502,299,315, or approximately 75 per cent. During the decade the average deposit of each depositor has fallen from $56.47 to $48.83. While the number of depositors in postal savings banks is 42 per cent of the number of depositors in all foreign savings banks, the deposits are only about 21 per cent of the total deposits in such banks.

In the thirty-four countries and dependencies having postal savings banks, the united kingdom leads in the number of depositors and amount of deposits—that is, 11,015,251 and $781,751,000, respectively. Japan comes next with 8,912,193 depositors; in Italy, 3,598,582; France, 5,024,000; Belgium, 1,226,232; Austria, 2,064,403; Hungary, 1,783,996; Netherlands, 1,401,941; British India, 1,262,763. Colonial postal savings banks have but 155,835 depositors, but their deposits are about $4,000,000, making the average deposit account $239.83, the top one in the world. Postal savings banks in any country, but the report shows 420 to 500 banks with a total of 25,000,000 deposit accounts, quite approaching $1,000,000,000 in deposits. The depositors number about $14,000,000,000.

CHILD'S MURDERERS GET LIFE.

Hattie Zinda's Slayers Sentenced at Milwaukee After Confession.

Carl Wojtchechowski and Adam Pietrzyk, the confessed murderers of 14-year-old Hattie Zinda, were taken into the Municipal Court in Milwaukee unexpectedly the other night and pleaded guilty. The men were about to be sentenced for life when Pietrzyk, who confessed that Wojtchechowski committed the murder while he held off would guard outside, asked for an attorney to make a plea for clemency. This request was granted. After a hearing, lasting three hours, both men were sentenced to life imprisonment and arrangements were made to start them to the state prison before dark.

GROCERS CHARGE CONSPIRACY.

Government Begins Investigation of High Prices of Foodstuffs.

High prices of foodstuffs are being investigated by the United States district Attorney's office in New York, because of complaints by the largest wholesale grocers that there seems to exist a conspiracy among some manufacturers to maintain prices to the consumer. It is learned that several manufacturers of food products have been called before District Attorney Wise and informed that the government has been using informers to keep up prices by certain acts of trade and a violation of the anti-trust law.

BOYS SEIZED AS MURDERERS.

Two of Trio Arrested for Robberies are Identified as Slayers.

In the arrest of three youths, aged 17, 19 and 21, the authorities in Chicago believe they have found the perpetrators of numerous robberies. Two of the youths, Ralph Clyne and Louis Dye, were identified by a witness as the men who shot and killed W. A. Spangler Nov. 24. Spangler was killed in his saloon during an attempted holdup. Dye, Samuel Spangler, was shot in both arms. The third prisoner, Harry Shay, was identified as the youth who accompanied Dye and Clyne on several expeditions.

"PAT" SHEEDY IS DEAD.

Noted Gambler and Sporting Man Succumbs to Complications.

Patrick F. Sheedy, known on two continents as a gambler and sporting man and in recent years the backer of an art gallery, died of a complication of diseases in his home, at 161 West 34th street, New York. Surrounded by the friends of old days, among them "Tammany Dan" Finn, Pat Sheedy withdrew from the game of life silently as was his wont, a smile on his face and with no fear in his eyes. "Speak kindly of him, if you can," his widow said to the reporters.

BIG FIRE AT KALAMAZOO.

One Life Probably Sacrificed and Much Property Destroyed.

One life probably was lost, many firemen were overcome by smoke, 300 hotel guests were driven into the icy streets and property valued at $1,000,000 was destroyed by a fire which started in Kalamazoo at 10 o'clock the other night and was extinguished after an all-night struggle by the combined fire-fighting forces at Kalamazoo, Battle Creek and Grand Rapids.

Originating in the basement of the Bland Hotel, a 5 and 10-cent store on West Main street, the flames, fanned by a strong southwest wind, spread east along the north side of Main street, destroying the Burdick House, a four-story hotel and score building covering more than half a block. Along an arcade running north through the Burdick building to Water street were half a dozen small establishments, all of which were destroyed. Sweeping east on Main street the flames spread until they threatened the Postal Telegraph and American Express offices, Chase's shoe store, Crosby's jewelry store and Kennedy's drug store and smaller business places.

The pressure in the mains is attributed the spread of the fire. The city depends for its supply on artesian wells and the water from this source was inadequate. A large standpipe at the asylum was connected with the mains, but gave only a temporary advantage.

"We are moving freight at the rate of a billion gross tons a year, and to do this we employ twenty two million and one-half freight cars, now nearly fifty thousand locomotives. We transport about nineteen million gross tons of merchandise yearly, and export about fifty-two million gross tons (our exports have shown a return of $1,000,000,000, and our domestic trade one of $21,000,000,000annually. One-fourth of the world's ocean commerce moves from North American ports, and the greater part of it our foreign trading is responsible. At this its volume is a drop in the bucket as against the great trunk-line tonnage in this country."

The Pennsylvania Railroad has placed orders in Philadelphia for 5,000 new freight cars. There are in addition to the orders for the regular replacements on the 1908 and 1910 schedules for which 10,000 cars have already been ordered since the year of 1906.

The New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company has been authorized to issue stock to the value of $14,000,000, or each share, the stock to be sold at par. Of the proceeds, nearly half will be used for the discharge of certain three-year 5 per cent gold notes, which mature in February, 1910.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says:

"The general conditions indicate that business is progressing, despite the hindrances interposed by rough weather, freezing and railroad difficulties in the Northwest. Bank clearings show a satisfactory gain, money is in broad request for commercial purposes and trading defaults have declined. Factory outputs in the principal industries exceed all former aggregates.

"Specifications assure considerable forward work at rail mills, forges and car shops. Improvement is maintained in structural steel activity, wire, machinery, hardware, electric and woodworking. The leather market is steady in sales.

"Further increase is noted in factory capacity and hands employed in the Calumet district and additional furnaces are operating at South Chicago.

"Snowstorms impeded crop marketings and heavy freight and merchandise movements, but the lower temperatures stimulated a strong demand for seasonable wares. Heavy-weight cottons, silks, woolens and Christmas lines are freely bought. Mail and road orders continue their favorable comparison with a year ago in dry goods, footwear, clothing, woolens, men's furnishings and food products.

"Lake navigation closed for the season with results satisfactory to vessel owners. Earnings of the Chicago steam roads disclose notable gains in net income for the first time last year.

"Bank clearings, $270,731,579, exceed those in the corresponding week last year by 5.5 per cent, and compare with $193,571,971 in 1907.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district number 76, against 78 last week, 61 two weeks and 39 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 7, against 7 last week, 12 in 1908 and 5 in 1907."

NEW YORK.

Colder weather and the nearer approach of the holidays have stimulated retail trade generally throughout the North and West, and have even helped Southern trade. As the week advanced there seemed to be evidence that the railroad strike was losing its effective sting as a trade deterrent.

"In wholesale lines there is something like a reasonable quieting down of business. There is no particular evidence of slowing down in industrial lines.

"Business failures in the United States for the week ending with Dec. 2 were 259, as against 220 last week, 225 in the like week of 1908, 234 in 1907, 229 in 1906 and 226 in 1905.

"Business failures in Canada for the week number 26, comparing with 25 last week and 40 in the corresponding week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

Uncle Sam now financially fat offers tempting bait to investors, for he proposes showing that revenues in five years have increased sufficiently to pay $1,347,442,450 in expenses for running the United States, and patent office and have a surplus of $18,416.

Machinery and small tools valued at $1,000,000 were destroyed by a fire which started the plant of the Boston Gear Works at Cordley Downs, Mass.

Two men were killed in the basement of the First National Bank Building in Colorado Springs, Colo., caused a loss of $100,000.

Christmas Bells

Ring, merry bells, once more repeat
The old familiar story,
How the beloved Son of God
Came down from the realms of glory,
Be not afraid, saith messenger
Of tidings glad and free,
Ring, merry bells, and in the poor
Awaken hopes that sighing;
Ring! Let your symphony, ye tones,
With human love complying,
Cheer the cold heart and soften the breast;
Give faith in place of sighing.

Ring, merry bells, where homes are bright,
And joyous odds in pleasure;
Touch tender chords, that wealth may unite
From out her boundless treasure
Gifts to the needy, joy to those
Who have but scanty measure;
Ring, merry bells, that youthful hearts,
And all whose hearts are heavy,
May hear rejoicingly again
The angels' welcome story
Of Peace on Earth, Goodwill to Men,
And to the Highest—Glory!
—Needham Phillips.

WHAT THEY WANTED.

I have been in the habit of collecting my gifts concerning the Christmas gifts for the last two or three years, and the grain broker to the man at the office-building clerk stand. "I learn that I have asked William and Richard and Tillie and Richard what William would like. I have been very much interested they would be in a position to know, and also in my dealings with the clerks to share a secret with a grown-up person, besides establishing the right sort of confidence with a grown-up person, which I think is a mighty good thing, too.

"It certainly is," agreed the elegant man.

"Yes," said the grain broker, reflectively, "it's a good thing. I called William into the library last night and I said: 'Bill, old boy, what do you suppose Dick would like for Christmas?'

"'I think he said he wanted a watch,' William replied. 'I heard him whisper the other day that he had one of these pearl-handled vulvers with four blades and a toothpick and a corkscrew and a little pair of scissors and a thing to pull stones out of horses' feet and a nice blade and a pinket and a can opener. And then,' he added, 'he's been wanting a fountain pen.'

"Soon after I took opportunity of calling Richard aside. 'Christmas is coming along here every soon, Dick-by,' I said. 'What are we going to get for Brother Bill?'

"He wants a watch,' said Richard, 'and he's about a sheet worn out, and it's getting too small for him, and these air rifles—you know, he'd be awful cheered if you got him an air rifle.'

"Presently I found a racket in the next room. I could make out Dick's voice raised in heat and anger, and then Bill chipped in. I opened the door and stood out in the hall. I was now going to better at them to keep quiet when Richard shouted:

"'You I did, too.' 'You a lobster.' 'You didn't,' said Bill.

"'I did... I told you plain. I said a punching bag and a pair of skates and a fountain pen and a knife with three things and all you had was that lousy that measly fountain pen and the knife. I didn't leave out anything you told me, and I put in the new wheel and the air rifle—you know, he'd be mad sneak. I don't know what he is.'

"I don't care,' says Bill, defiantly.

"'All right for you. I'll fix you. I'll go right back and tell him you said you didn't want any watch.

"I went back and closed the door softly.

"But wouldn't that jar you?"

SOME NEW YEAR THOUGHTS.

The Past is Merely the Expression of the Sum Of Our Experience.

Commemoration of the beginning of the year is sentimental, purely, since the first day of January is not the special epoch in history, nor is it the anniversary of the birth or death of anybody here.

In looking for the beginning of this practice, one must go into the prehistoric past, for New Year is the most ancient of all the days which may have set apart for special distinction. In the former days, Janus, it began with the advent of spring. The Latin, from whom came the months now used, celebrated their New Year as the nations older than they had done, in March. This explains why December, meaning "tenth" month, should be twelfth in our calendar.

The day, then, neither a festival nor a fast, did stand for a most beautiful sentiment—the revivifying of nature. It harbingered the banishment of cold; it gave assurance of a better time for man, who could see in the bracing of the seeds autumn days of fall.

Thus was it with the Chaldean, old as of the civilized people, whom came Abraham, the founder of the Jewish nation. They were so puzzled as modern people are by the mystery of death, and that greater mystery, life, of the generation that they made a god and worshiped it. The presence other god was felt, seen, as they thought, in the new shoot set in by the trees, in the tiny spears of green grass which peeped through the snow blanket of the previous year, and in the many colored little flowers that crowded and filled up beside the grass-blades. Through century after century this reverence and festival observance was lost and the remains of it are seen today in the chief holy day of the great Catholic church during the revival season, although now held in commemoration of a grander and more glorious event.

In May, 1087, his remains were carried by some pious Italians to Bari, on the Adriatic coast. They are now at rest in a spacious church which bears his name. The people round about make a pilgrimage to his christ every year. No one knows for certain that occasion is refused by the priests, which accommodation is given to so many pilgrims as the edifice will hold. On St. Nicholas day, Dec. 6, a great celebration takes place in his honor. Early in the morning the populace take his image from the priests and carry it through the town. At night the city is grandly illuminated.

Christ's Birthday.

There is something akin to sadness in the fact that in trading the origin of many of our festivals we find it in pagan celebrations antedating the Christian era. There is nothing certain even about Christmas day—Christ. Some authorities assert that December is the dry season and shepherds were on duty with their flocks in the country over the date, attending from December to May, Pope Julius (337-352) had an investigation made by St. Cyril and was satisfied that the 25th of December was correct. It was so established in the Roman church, and before the end of the fourth century the decision was universally accepted.—Boston Herald.

tials of the toilet. Far prettier is the German custom of bestowing gaudy trifles that have no use in themselves. Its gift of the gifter and fashion of the holiday. When it is possible nothing is so great as to be the Christmas tree. In later years memory hangs upon it fondly, and we bless in our hearts the kind hands that took so much trouble to give us pleasure.

"Then the stocking hung up on Christmas eve has a romance all its own. The breakfast table dressed with holly-berries and gifts piled under snowy napkins is a graceful custom, and is far sheer than the blunt handing out of our gifts. Some trouble should be taken to create the element of surprise. We all like it, but it is one of the greatest delights in a child's experience. He finds out before we would choose to have him, that what is looked forward to most eagerly seldom turns out well. It is and philosophy, yet true, that it is dangerous to set one's heart on anything in this world. But the love that hides its intention until the hour of fulfillment, and then lets out its secret in an embrace of generosity, is best substitute that is ever offered for the special Providence—Santa Claus, and all other gracious myths.

As example of generosity is seldom lost upon children it is true, not artificial. They are very willing to live up to their little knowledge. If we allow them the chance, and part of our duty to the day is to encourage in our young people the same kindness we cultivate in ourselves. It is just because you cannot afford expensive presents. The thoughtfulness of your gift, the interest you take in their "o when you give, we're pretty cheap things. The intrinsic value on your gift counts very little.

For the Children.

"Yes," said Mr. Bickles, "we always celebrate Christmas for the children's sakes. They expect it, you know, and I wouldn't have the heart to disappoint them." "But you and Mrs. Bickles always remember each other?" "Oh, yes. I am going to give her a two-hundred-dollar coat and I have reason to think she intends to give me a fifty-dollar chair. We always settle well in advance what our presents will be. All we have to think of now is a doll for the little girl and a tin sword for the boy."—Washington Star.

Christmas in the Desert

There is a Christmas which calls up strange memories to me, writes a correspondent of the Montreal Star. I spent it in the Great Oasis of the Libyan Desert. It was full of marvels. We traveled on a railway that was not yet open across a savage and irreclaimable wilderness, which no traveler had even traversed before, slave painfully with six days' journeying on camel-back over pillars strewn with round boulders like ancient cannon balls; over plains covered every inch of sikkal, over hummocks of golden sand, over mountains massive like the pyramids, over sheets of contorted black rocks, like the lava fields of Mount Etna, always without sign of water, always without sign of life. On the plain behind the mountains we saw flew down the swift incline we saw the false green of the Oasis, and when we drew near it gave us the impression of a man taming the wilderness to grow his crops of barley, wheat and the bounteous berseem; not the palm trees shading clear pools, which were the oases we dreamed of in our childhood. And our party, it was so familiar and so unfamiliar—consisted of a girl and Rudolrooke, the sun-baked man in the government service, the government who had surveyed the oasis prior to sale. His Arab servant, always in spotless white, with a turban on, He had an shrund dragoman, a little Berberine, who wore a turbaned hat, bursting trouis shoes, a black frock coat and trousers, to cook and wait on us in the desert.

The idea of a great house had terified my wife. It was really high up in the scale of hotels. It had a bathroom and bedrooms, lofty and spacious, and in the center quite a fine hall, lavishlooked at our end, verandahed at the other, set with wooden columns up the corner, where fifty sojourners could take their meals and refuge from the heat. It is easy to supply most bedrooms with tents, and all this was built of sand-stones and fire bricks—its dark brown contrasted very pleasantly with the fresh pine window sashes and doors. There were no mosquitoes, so we could fling our windows wide to the autumn air, and have the night sounds of Africa.

I was up in time to see the sunrise, flooding with golden light the pale green of the palms in front—even at Christmas!—while strictness of desert behind, and on the horizon the tumbled sea of mountains, the crest of the desert we had crossed. The angry drum of a camel disturbed me. I went through the hall, and there, in our kitchen yard of desert, were five tall camels, objecting to be down, as they would presently object to get up. Breakfast over, my wife, who looks upon the camel as a wild beast, and the manager's wife and the lunch were mounted on a trolley, which was soon flying up the line to the rest-house by the Temple of Harbiya, propelled by three stalwart Arabs in thirsting white robes, and the solemn camel-mounting ceremony began.

As we drew near Kharga, which gives the oasis its modern name, we saw high on our left the House of Kharga, where the founder of the Senoussian was an exile and a captive, and on the sand hills to our right saw whole streets of arcaded ancient Roman tombs standing out noble on the clear, like the tombs of the Mamelukes at Cairo, the most picturesque city of the dead among all the Roman ruins of the world. As we rode up to them we passed the camp of a scientific expedition from an American university. Their minds were very practical. The tombs and mummies were nothing to them—they were hunting for lost splendors of the early saints, for Christian papyri, in fact. At the present moment they were cooking a Christmas dinner in a much earlier cook tomb of pagan extraction. Being American, their idea of Christmas was a turkey. They were in the midst of a tragedy. The favorite camel, which had never seen a harsh look from man, had just been beaten for making its Christmas dinner off the only papyrus that they found. They had endured with patience its habit of eating musty lambskins. We documented from our camels and entered the Street of the Dead, looking as incongruous as possible, the men were noticed by in motor veils against sunstroke and dust.

The temple at Kharga will be very famous. Its pylons tower over a delightful grove of date palms, and when you have passed through the grove an velvety sand you come to a temple as it had you have never seen before. For it is a Persian temple, built by the King Darius, who tried to conquer Greece. It is very old, very elegant, very picturesque, and its light, bright colors are admirably preserved. I could have spent a whole day there, but time was short for us. It was 2, and we had breakfasted at 4, and there was much to see after lunch. So we rode down to the other cemetery, which looked like the palace of a New Orleans king, with its straw thatch and verandahs. As we drew near I saw a perfect Roman house, built of mud, of course. I wanted to go over it, but it belonged to a farmer, and he had tacked his wife up in it, or perhaps his wives, and sent out into the hide for his pay.

After lunch we rode on to Kharga, the oasis village, the most extraordinary sight of the day, for it was here the oasis we dreamed of in our childhood. And our party, it was so familiar and so unfamiliar—consisted of a girl and Rudolrooke, the sun-baked man in the government service, the government who had surveyed the oasis prior to sale. His Arab servant, always in spotless white, with a turban on, He had an shrund dragoman, a little Berberine, who wore a turbaned hat, bursting trouis shoes, a black frock coat and trousers, to cook and wait on us in the desert.

MYTHS FOUNDERED.

Last Lumber Cargo Steamer to Leave This Port This Year.

The big steamer E. A. Meyer, which cleared from this port only a few days ago, says the Boyne Citizen, has met her doom and is another victim of the treacherous waters of Lake Erie. A telegram received this morning by the W. H. White Co. only stated that the boat had foundered in Lake Erie but that the crew had been saved.

The Fort had on a big load of hand wood timbers and lumber, having been loaded by the W. H. White Co., and was bound for Buffalo. The company with a number of other vessels she had been held upin Lake St. Clair by the ice which they were unable to get through until a power ful tug had been secured to open a passage. She finally got down through the Detroit river only to meet disaster in the open lake. She foundered off Port Colborne. No further particulars are known than were contained in the above mentioned dispatch. This is the first trip the Myers ever made to Boyne City. She was a large craft for this harbor and attracted a lot of attention by her size and apparent seaworthiness while lying here at the docks. She was delayed in loading by the severe weather and was here for some time.

The Myers was windbound at a Charlevoix port several days outbound. Capt. Rasdel evidently did not share the "13" superstition with many of his brother skippers, as the Charlevoix custom house records show that he cleared Dec. 13th.

What Do You Know About This?

Washington special: A story has drifted down here to the effect that the Roosevelt cruise is said destined to have a continuous administration of his progressional affairs; that Mr. Dolliver is going down after another session, leaving the succession to Dennis Alward. This story cannot be confirmed here, although it is not difficult to believe almost anything about the politics of this peculiar, long drawn out district, which stretches from the southern limit of Gratiot county to the northern extremity of Charlevoix county.

The same story had it that Mr. Darragh withdrew in favor of Dodge because of a dat agreement, made at the time of Darragh's last successful appearance in the primaries. Under ordinary circumstances it is considered rather remarkable that Mr. Darragh, having served in the national house, should appear to be planning to try for a seat in the legislature.

Without reference to any alleged agreement, it is not difficult to account for the course followed by Mr. Alward during the last primary campaign. He has a good job in Washington as real big cock in the house. This might be imperiled by persistent campaigning in the face of probable defeat, but for him to begin a campaign and then quit, as he did, was to put the beneficiary of his course under direct obligation. And as Mr. Alward is quite securely seated in his job as reading clerk just now, thank you.

To Make It Permanent.

The Western Michigan Development Association held a meeting at Traverse City Thursday afternoon for the purpose of effecting a permanent organization. The association was formed early last spring and immediately plunged into the Chicago exhibition. This has cost nearly $15,000 and the association finds itself financially embarrassed. The meeting later will be in form a permanent organization and provide means for continuing the work.

It is planned, when the Pere Marquette builds its new station at Ludington to have in it a room for a permanent exhibit of Western Michigan products. It is proposed to carry on the same scheme elsewhere and thus use the necessity for a permanent organization.

THE "REGENT."

A Diamond That Restored the Fortune of the House of Pitt.

Men have never collected great crystals for personal adornment. Even Bacchus in late and spangles," the royal of Bean Brummel and afterward George IV. of England—can be sought them simply for some freckle he was parading.

Louis XIV. in grand menagerie, purchased twenty-five large diamonds, mostly for La Vallière, Montespan, Fontanges, Maintenon. Among them was the wonderous "Pitt." A slave in India found it. Having found it, his heart shouted for liberty. Cutting the calf of his leg in order to hide the diamond within the slit, he fleeted to the coast. To an English ship captain he offered it for passage to any country where men were free.

The captain, quite casually and with slow humor, took the gem and threw the slave into the sea.

The captain of such jesting relation from sea-limits was sold to a dealer for $2,000 and through him reached Sir Robert Pitt, governor of Fort St. George, for $125,000, who shipped it home to England to be faceted.

A Scotch financier, John Law, then doing business in France, negotiated for a fee of $25,000 the sale of the diamond to the regent (afterward Louis XIV.) at $750,000.

It is pleasant to remember that thereby the fortunes of the house of Pitt were restored and that the seller's son, William Pitt, and his grandson, the Earl of Chatham, were assisted to high place and service by opportunities made possible through the profit on the diamond for which a poor slave, seeking freedom, was thrown into the sea.—Everybody's.

AN IRISH DUEL.

Rules Were Ignored and the Meeting Had a Happy Ending.

A duel with a super coating seems an anomaly, yet one is commemorated in Blackwood's Magazine in an article on Irish "fine points." The duel was arranged was between John Egan, a county judge, and Roger Barrett, master of the rolls. Both men were unarmed, and the meeting upon the grounds of Judge Egan's Street was champion belle.

Upon the combatants taking their ground Barrett, who was the challenger, promptly fired without waiting for the signal to be given and then waited coolly away, calling out:

"Now, Egan, my honor is satisfied!"

The Judge, however, was to be numan contented and shouted: "Hello, Stop, Roger, till I take a shot at your honor!"

Barrett thereupon came back and, pinning himself in his former station, said compositely:

"All right, then. Fire away."

Egan presented his pistol and, taking most deliberate aim, fired at one jerk of the mainsney of the master of rolls and then at another, second deliberated to finish him outright. At last, however, he cried out:

"I won't hinter you! I won't be bothered shooting you! So now you may go your own way or come and shake hands with me, whichever way you like best."

Barrett chose to shake hands, and amid the plaudits of the crowd the antagonists departed from the field in much good humor, the best of friends.

A Haughty Personage.

Professors in Germany are honorary personages and know it, but they probably ever reach the pinnacle of haughtiness attained by the one of whom this anecdote is narrated.

He was one of the greatest men in the faculty at Heidelberg. One day the authorities of that city ordered that the street in front of the professor's house should be paved.

"If you don't stop that noise," remarked the professor to the pavers, "I shall give up my position as a member of the Heidelberg faculty."

The pavers stopped work at once. The municipal authorities just around to inquire respectfully of the professor when they might pave the street.

"When I take my vacation," he replied.

Then, and then only, was the street paved.

Influence of Sunshine.

M. Pouillet, an alleyoftne competent authority on the subject, concluded from some experiments he made that the coldest of cold celestial space must be at least 235 of Fahrenheit's scale lower than the temperature of freezing water—that is, further below freezing water than boiling water is above it. Such would certainly be the condition of things when the surface of the earth is in the centre absence of sunshine, and such the earth will certainly become, for it is as certain as anything that the world that the time will come when the heat of the sun will cease.—Exchange.

Evening worship at 7.

Preaching at 2:30 at Epworth church by Rev. F. M. Taylor.

—What would Christmas be, anyway, without the snow-drifts and the sleigh-bells and the bob sleds, and the boys coasting on the sidewalk in front of our house? What would Christmas be without the sleigh-rides, the fur robes, the apples and cider, the pop corn and bench nuts? The harder the wind blows and the higher the snow-drifts the merrier the Christmas when the coal fire glows or the bench knots blaze in the grate. What is Christmas to those Charlevoix millionaires—Eg. Carpenter and Morris Stockman down in Florida under the magnolias? We would not send them a plum of cider or a big red Charlevoix county apple in exchange for a basket of oranges if their winter's comfort depended upon the exchange. We are mad at them, the big gauders, for not staying at home where they belong—where the little snow-birds are twittering and the water-lowers is shedding its surplus over the disparaging landscape. Out upon such mollycoddles.

Men Like Horses.

"Men are a good deal like horses in one way," remarked the observer. "When you are walking home some evening and we some such a little ahead of you walking at about the same pace try to increase your speed a little and pass him. In nine cases out of ten he will square his shoulders, lengthen his stride and do his best to keep ahead without making apparent effort. You will immediately feel a greater desire to pass him. Of course both of you try to look as if oblivious of the other, and probably neither would admit it if accused of racing, but you are. This may not work on a downtown street, but try it any time on any other and you'll soon likely start something. It's a mighty good spirit to have too. The people who try hard not to be left behind are usually hard to beat."—Kansas City Times.

S. Holmes Outdone.

"You seem to be deeply interested in your book."

"Yes; it's awfully exciting."

"The hero is a college athlete, isn't he?"

"Why, yes. How did you know? Have you read it?"

"I never saw or heard of it before. He has been temporarily disowned by his wealthy father, has he not?"

"Of course. Don't tell me that you haven't read it."

"And when he first meets the heroine she thinks she has cause to hate him—thinks him he is a cad or something of that kind—and he, and at least, swears that if he can't have her he will never marry."

"Oh, Jack! What do you mean by telling there and pretending you have not read it? That's exactly the way it reads."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Bridget's Offence.

Grout, aged four, intently watched the cook draw a chicken. Running to his mother, he said, "I saw Bridget take all the meanwind out of the chicken."

Lost in the Shuffle.

Stubbdor—"So old Sharkins's family didn't like the obituary I wrote?" Stubbor—"Oh, the obituary was all right, but the bad foreman ran it under the head of 'People and Pleasant Events.'"

Marine Notes.

Capt. Roe brought his Harbor Springs tug here Friday, where she is hauled for boiler repairs.

The game wardens' steamer Chase S. Osborn is hauled out at this port for the winter, and Deputy Eddy left Friday for his home at the Soo.

The steamship Illinois, of the N. M. Trans Co. line, arrived in Cleveland last week, where she is to receive new boilers. There is also a strong probability that she will be lengthened twenty feet.

The steamer Beaver, in leaving the lumber dock at St. James Thursday, struck a sunken obstruction and broke off a number of her wheel. She was over four hours on her return run. She will continue her winter trips with three buckets as long as it is considered reasonably safe.

R. C. Cross returned home from Green Bay on Monday's boat.

Mrs. Bert Nash went to Cheboygan to spend the winter with her parents.

Ed H. Gallagher returned from Charlevoix Monday after a two weeks visit.

Fred Roskie went to Manistee to look for shingle weavers for the L. I. Co.

Mrs. O. Procter, of Cheboygan, was visiting her father, Hugh Hoyle for a few weeks.

Daniel Gurney died at his home in Chicago last week. He leaves a widow, the daughter of the late John H. O'Donnell, and a sister of Mrs. C. C. Gallagher.

Boyne Citizen: The Beulah Home is being taken in charge of by Mrs. Swift, who is fully competent to take care of the home. In fact most of the care of the home has been on her shoulders most of the time on account of the absence of Mr. Swift much of the time the past summer. Work on the new addition to the home has been suspended for the present.

Local News.

—Fred H. Brown went to Chicago Tuesday on business.

—The steamer Beaver is still making island trips, regardless of schedule.

—Joseph Left, an old settler of Beaver Island, died at his home in St. James, Sunday night.

—Albert Holmes left Monday for Howse to attend the golden wedding of his parents.

—George Raney, of Grand Rapids, joined his wife here Monday for a short visit among relatives and friends.

—Mrs. O. D. Wood has bought the Frank Chaloupka residence on the north side and will occupy it in the spring.

—Jos. McElroy, of Banks, leaves this week for Dr. Spinney's sanatarium at Smyrna, Mich., for medical treatment.

—Miss Mabel Weed, attending the Ypsilanti normal school, is here spending the holidays with her aunt, Mrs. Merriam.

—The local fish hatchery will be in operation again within the next two weeks, with A. T. Bennett in charge, and will probably have a month or six weeks run.

—Married Dec. 23d at the home of the bride's father, James Saunders, in this city, Mr. Bert Brown to Miss Lina Saunders, both of Charlevoix. Rev. Mr. Taylor was the officiating clergyman.

—At the last regular meeting of the Ancient Order of Gleaners the following officers were elected: Chief Gleaner, Walter Black; Vice Chief Gleaner, Edith Meggison; Secretary and Treasurer, Anna Hibbert; Chaplain, Abbie Trimble; Conductor, Geo. Meggison; Conductress, Mary Hammond; Lecturer, Bessie Reed; Inner Guard, George Trimble; Outer Guard, Edward Reed.

—The Harbor Springs Republican records the fact that Mrs. H. B. Chapman, who has been residing in Los Angeles, Cal., most of the time for the past two or three years, arrived at the grand age of 90 years one day last week. Old settlers of Charlevoix will remember Mrs. Chapman as the widow of the late H. B. Chapman, who built the "recent hotel" at Bay Springs, which is now the Beulah Home.

—The proposition is up to make Baldwin the headquarters of the Western Michigan Development Bureau next year. Why? Why leave Traverse City where the movement had its birth, and where its first success was achieved? Traverse City is the most important fruit growing enterprise in Michigan. It is the metropolis of the Grand Traverse region, and the Grand Traverse region is the nerve center of Western Michigan Horticulture. There is no sense in the proposition to change.

—The supreme court handed down a decision last week declaring unconstitutional the law enacted by the legislature last winter, providing for appeals from the equalization between townships and counties to boards of supervisors. This law, known as Act No. 202, provided for the appointment of a committee of appeals in case a supervisor was not satisfied with the equalization as fixed by the board, one member to be selected by the supervisor making the appeal, one by the board and these two to choose a third member. The case decided was the one brought from Bay county, and two cases from Mackinac and Muskegon counties were also presented to the court.

—Guy Myers, who is spending the winter in Grand Rapids, is here for a week.

—Most of the Charlevoix contingent of young people in college are here for the holiday vacation.

—Miss Helen Smith will leave next week for Chicago to take a course of piano study under Liebling.

—The mercury reached its lowest point for Charlevoix this year by registering six degrees above zero Tuesday morning.

—Otto Hines is in Grand Rapids spending the holidays with his brother, Galo, who is in that city studying pharmacy.

—Mr. and Mrs. Myron Geer, who have been living in Grand Rapids thus far this winter, are here with relatives for the holidays.

—New ads this week: J. L. Crane, M. A. Lerinson & Co., A. E. Mason and F. E. Frasier. They all convey valuable information.

—Of the 83 counties in Michigan 30 are already dry, and 27 are now on the list as battle fields for a dry campaign with election next spring.

—Round Lake froze over Tuesday night, and St. James reported Wednesday morning that considerable ice was formed to the eastward of the island.

—Nally Cram, who has been the efficient St. James manager for the Booth Fisheries Co., and H. Heutel Co., and a few local shipments by fishermen in the early part of the season. The figures are surprising, but give the lie to those who refer to Charlevoix, in an envious spirit as "merely a fishing station."

There were shipped from the port of Charlevoix by boat and rail from January 1st, 1909, to date 920 tons of fish.

These shipments were made through the wholesale agencies of the Booth Fisheries Co. and H. Heutel & Co., and represent the catch coming into the port by Charlevoix fishermen, less 200 tons of Beaver Island shipments through these agencies. This leaves 700 tons to the credit of the port of Charlevoix.

Seventy-five percent of this catch were trout and whitefish, trout predominating by about 10 percent—the remainder representing "chubs," perch and suckers.

In Charlevoix alone, to which these statistics chiefly refer, the industry involves the employment of 100 men, most of these all are employed nine months of the year, and fully half of them during the period that ice prevents operations on the lake.

It is a great industry—one that deserves the thoughtful consideration of both state and national governments, in impartial restriction by the former, and the continued scientific nurturing by the latter.

"If This Be Treason Make the Most of It."

State Game Warden Pierce is one of the state officials holding office by appointment of Gov. Warner who is shouting for Patrick Henry Kelley. Pierce's talk and shouts are for Secretary of State Martindale for the republican nomination for governor next year. The reason for it is said to be that Patrick Henry, if elected governor, will appoint State Senator Fred Ming, of Cheboygan, state warden to succeed Pierce, whose four year term will expire about the time the governor takes hold in January, 1911.

Unless we are very much mistaken, Mr. Pierce's connections will expire during Gov. Warner's tenure of office, and you may safely wager a bushel of big red Charlevoix county apples that Fred will not let the grass grow under his feet in filling the vacancy.

This being the case, whether or not Patrick Henry Kelley is elected governor, he will come pretty near dictating the appointment of the next game warden.

Such ingratitude on the part of our friend Pierce is sharper than a serpent's tooth.

Cook—Peary.

Copenhagen says "not proven," in the Dr. Cook north pole case. The verdict practically knocks Cook out, and a fakir until the contrary is raised on the next act,—for the exhibition is not closed.

Cook may be a fakir, but there is another one, and his name is Walter Wellman. He has never been up against Copenhagen, but his polar trip has not, never to rise again. While Cook may remain in the darkness of oblivion, nobody will peep around the corner to see where Wellman is or where he is doing.

While Cook may have been easily fooled in the world's respect, Peary has not been rated an inch in the scale of the world's consideration. The world "writes him down an ass." Manliness, courtesy, generosity and truthfulness are so far from his little skrivelled up soul as the arctic is from the antarctic.

SWIFT ON BAIL.

The Beulah Home Head a Free Man Until Next Term of Court.

In the Swift case things took a decided turn last Friday, when A. B. Kline, the Petoskey-Sturgeon Bay lumberman struck town.

Swift was in jail in default of $12,000 bail—$4,000 in each of three counts, and few more impending if the three failed to keep him in jail. The strenuosity of certain people who had already tried and convicted Swift, stirred up Kline, who last year gave Mr. Swift $1,000 for his use in prosecuting his Beulah Home work. Kline says he gave this money to Swift with no string tied to it, for whatever use he (Swift) thought best to expend it. He finds Swift in jail with not a penny with which to defend himself—all funds, including his $1,000 gift, being tied up by injunction.

Mr. Kline says that if Swift is guilty he should be punished; if innocent he should be vindicated. But while that question is unsettled Swift should have a square deal and he is determined that he shall have it.

And so, through the efforts of Mr. Kline, W. H. White and P. F. McIlmoyre, of Boyne City, were induced to sign the bail bonds.

The Beulah has not and will not, pending trial in February, express an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, but it refuses to hang Swift until he is proven guilty.

Mr. Kline, on his own account, retained Attorney Lisle Shanahan to represent Swift and Beulah Home, but whether or not it is as associate counsel with Judge J. M. Harris, we have not learned.

Death of an Aged Lady.

Died, at the home of her brother, Capt. P. D. Campbell, at eight o'clock Christmas evening, Mrs. W. S. Ely aged 67 years. Mrs. Ely had been a widow for several years residing in Syracuse, N. Y.

In August last, in failing health, she came to Charlevoix upon the insistent request of her brother, to make her home with him while she lived. An aggravated case of heart trouble steadily sapped her vitality until the final hour when she breathed her last in the arms of her faithful brother.

A brief funeral service was held at the Campbell home Monday morning, and the remains left at nine o'clock for interment at Muskegon, accompanied by Capt Campbell. During the brief period of her painful sojourn in Charlevoix Mrs. Ely was provided with every care that tender solicitude and devotion could suggest.

The family requests us to convey its gratitude to the kindness shown by thoughtful and sympathetic friends.

(Petoskey News: Mrs. Kate Smith and Mrs. Louis Litchfield left this afternoon for Kinsevine, Mo., where Mrs. Litchfield, who has been ill for a number of years, will take a course of treatment. They were accompanied by Mrs. Jessie Smith Mayberry, who was at one time one of the brilliant musicians of the state, and who is at present the leading spirit in all musical organizations of the city of Rochester, N. Y., in which she lives.

—The Mt. Pleasant Enterprise is responsible for the following bit of good sense: "Now that the subject of spraying fruit trees has become so generally interesting to the public, the problem of having the work done properly is a question which is worrying many of the small farmers and it has been suggested that a man whose inclination leads him to such a line of work, should go through the country with an apparatus and outfit and make a business of spraying the farmers' orchards for them. A reasonable price could be charged for the work and besides making a healthy employment for himself the carrier out of such a plan would be working an untold good for the country. As conditions are now, one man can go to the trouble and expense of learning his local option district, recent years have not been helpful to either the friends or the opponents of that policy and it is best for all concerned that there should give way to discussion and representation such as we give to other public affairs of serious importance. It is the intention of the newspaper men friendly to that view of the question to use to it that local option is hereafter given a fair hearing and a square deal and that it shall not be subjected as it has been heretofore to methods of opposition which would not be made use of as to any other question concerning which people were desirous of knowing the truth."

A GREAT INDUSTRY

What the Charlevoix Fisheries Mean to Charlevoix—Some Big Figures.

The SENTINEL settle spent considerable time last week and this in digging up from authentic sources, the aggregate of fish that have been caught and sold by Charlevoix fishermen through the local wholesalers—the Booth Fisheries Co., the H. Heutel Co., and a few local shipments by fishermen in the early part of the season. The figures are surprising, but give the lie to those who refer to Charlevoix, in an envious spirit as "merely a fishing station."

WHAT LOCAL OPTION DOES

More Money for Deposits, More Homes Being Paid for and Better Clothes Worn by the Citizens.

There are still a few people in the city who insist that local option is a serious detriment to the community, says the Boyne City Journal. That the people are not so prosperous and that the town will certainly go "backward" if we don't go back to the good old saloon days. We say a few, because that is the truth. There are but a few who contend that the citizens are worse off than before we got rid of the open saloon.

Now for the benefit of those few, and any others who have any doubts, we want to call their attention to a little thing that we run across today. It is generally admitted that there is no one thing that so surely gauges the prosperity of the common people as the savings deposits in the banks. They are not made up of the funds of the business men but are the little savings of the poorer people. Whenever the savings accounts are growing the country, or community, where such is the case, is prospering.

Now, listen to this. From May to November, 1908, when we had open saloons in Boyne City, the savings deposits in the Boyne City National Bank increased $3,000.

From May to November, 1909, when we did not have open saloons in Boyne City, the savings deposits increased $9,000. Three times the increase with no saloons that there was when we had the saloons. Now this stands for just one thing, and that is, that a lot of money which formerly went into the saloons is now being saved. While this does not show all the money that is saved, for a very large amount is going into homes, it shows a proportionate difference between saloons and no saloons. The rank and file of Boyne City were never better off than they are today. There families by the dozens who are paying for a home today who never even made a start before. There are hundreds of men, women and children wearing better clothes in Boyne City today than they ever had before. There are more happy faces than formerly were seen and altogether the conditions are better, very much better, than when the city was supporting 13 saloons. If this is not true we will gladly publish any article furnished us which disproves it.

Something That Should Be Considered

A remark was dropped in our hearing the other day that "local option is adopted in Charlevoix county; now give us a rest on the subject."

Oh! Just so!

And here lies the danger. The enactment of a law and then total indifference as to its effect spells failure. A Beaver Island individual was in Charlevoix several days the past week. He came over to get a big pocket; he went house broke, and he was drunk most of the time.

Who got the money?

Union temperance meetings, W. C. T. U. socials and long winded pulpit harangues are futile in making a law effective.

To be sure conditions are much better, but a badly enforced law is a weapon in the hands of the enemy. This is what the Traverse City Eagle says about it:

"There is but one way out of the dilemma, which is for the same people who constituted the campaign for local option to continue their vigilance and see that the law is fully enforced to the letter. No other people will take sufficient interest in the enforcement of the law, for they did not care to have the plan adopted in the first place, so will not be a party to enforcing its conditions. If the people who were so strenuous in the campaign for adoption sit idly by and bemoan the fact that it is not kept they are to blame for the majority vote going against them when the vote is taken at the next election on the subject."

The Redemption of David Corson

By CHARLES FREDERIC GOSS

CHAPTER XXIII

The people of this country's history in which these characters were present was one of tremendous interest and unrest. In that struggle in which men pitted himself against primeval forces and aboriginal inhabitant, the strongest types of manhood and womanhood were evolved, and those who conceived the idea of this new life in Western life set themselves to the realization with the same energy with which they addressed themselves to the conquest of nature itself. In multitudes of them, this present world took a place that in the fashion some of the world was secondary to their other world in which they lived in soul-fellowship.

David Corson was only one of many who, to a degree, sacrificed these lofty ideals of life and noble materialistic success of a different order. The sacrifice appears incredible, and seemed so then to those who knew him well under their feet. He awoke next morning with an unrelated purpose and an entirely four-set constituent about its execution. He broke a lance for a cause that was forgotten for a rock with him that grappled with him and hurled him out of the floor for the future, and then with a flag of surrender, he crawled back into an age in his hand started forth to carry out a plan which he had formed in the night.

He began to prepare for himself a temporary health which should shelter him until he could build his cabin, and the rest of the day was consumed in this exercise. At the end of the simple task was done, so easy is it to provide a home in the Western wilds, and requires not and luxury. Having once more satisfied the demands of the flesh, he ate food at his rude board, and he felt a sense of peace and of rest. The stillness upon a night of silence, the sounds of the coal, quiet evening was broken only by the crackling of the flames, the quiet murmurs of the law little rills which threaded their way through the woods and challenged the emotions of this man to unusual complaint. He was alone in the tall tree tops, and the steady tread of generations of the forest who preceded seemed, while seeking their prey, to discover if possible, the meaning of this strange man, who had come to unless with which their forest world had remained.

There came to the resolute woodsman a sense of peace, and it was a sense of having been in some way taken back into the fellowship of the forest, into the companionship of the universe, and into the silent communion of the ages. He felt the fell sabers with pulse throughout pierced the sense of stillness about him. The Spirit of Nature was a crystal lake, and David was a stone that had been thrown into the quivering bosom of the lake, and the ripples of stillness about the stone, the ripples of the quivering bosom of the lake, the quivering bosom of the lake, the quivering bosom of the lake,

INDIANS GET MONEY

Government About to Distribute Snug Sums to Wards.

More than 7,000 Michigan Indians, or persons of Indian descent, will get a gift of money from Uncle Sam before many weeks. Their names are registered in the Indian office in a master roll, upon which the finishing touches are being placed. Those who have to wait for their gifts clear will receive in the aggregate about $125,000. For every man, woman and infant in Michigan who has a certain connection with the old Ottawa and Chippewa tribe, the United States has set apart nearly $15. The payment will be made next June than March, possibly a little earlier.

Sometimes the average citizen of Michigan will be surprised to know that there are 7,000 Indians and Chippewas in the state. The fact is that you might live next door neighbor to many of these Indians and never know that they were Indians. But the announcement that Uncle Sam has a lot of money to hand out from time to time is strange, as usual, brought forth the full quota of the curious.

The government knows and the time of its gifts is making this call. Two specific agencies handled the job, and were entrusted with the money. Therefore they were glad to be relieved. For it was officially reported by at least one of them that it was a tough job to get at most one member of the tribe was a hopeless task.

Finally, it U. Durant was sent into Michigan as a special agent. Accompanied by a clerk and interpreter, he went through the old Indian hunting grounds in search of claimants. He investigated claims of everyone. He questioned neither. He hunted out the aged women who were young when the treaty of 1855 was made, and from them by the interpreter's help, he secured valuable evidence in determining the validity of claims. Some of those claiming he refused to recognize. The other names were entered upon thrift rolls. With legal notices in North Manitou, Traverse City and Petoskey he traveled over into the most inaccessible parts in search of Manitou and Leelanau, Little Traverse, Grand Traverse and Grand River bands, and their descendants. And in the wigwams and tepees he sought out the old Sun band.

Take difficulty by taking a census of the old Ottawa and Chippewas is evidence of the success of the government's policy of bringing the tribes into the intimacy of the Indians. The band of Peak considered at Detroit, seemingly is perplexed, partially in return for this very money now about to be paid, that all tribal relations should be broken. The Indians were pledged just to stick together as a tribe. They kept their word in spirit and letter.

Uncle Sam paid his obligations just by great multitude. Since then the Indians have longed for their rights in Eastern congress and before the courts. It was not until March 1, 1907, that they secured a decree of claims for a balance of $6,000,000, with interest at 5 per cent since March 3, 1905. And since that decree was made, it has taken the government nearly three years to draw up the rolls of Indians to share in the money, and to get ready to pay it out.

It is estimated that the Indians in Michigan will share in $131,188. In addition to this, it has been found that $3,200 which should have been paid the Indians years ago lapsed into the federal treasury with all apology. The treasury authorities have decided, with one exception, that the money was paid, and they have added the $3,200 to the other sections. But the aggregate will be cut down by the cost of making the roll, by the fees of the lawyer who fought for the Indian's rights, and possibly by the cost of paying the Indians of those years who are expected to contribute a little more than $20,000.

He represented Congressman McLaughlin, the congressional member, when the time arrives for final payment, will spend some time in Mason and Lake counties, in addition to Traverse City and Petoskey.

Health and Money.

There is a difference between these two tubular baggage, health and money. Money is the most current but the least enjoyable. Health is the most enjoyed but the least valued, and the superiority of the latter is still more obvious when we reflect that the possession would not part with health for money but the richest would gladly part with their money for health," said Journal. "Yet we are paying more attention to health matters than they need to. They understand disease better than health. Chiropractic treatment of strength lies in the fact that the people are understanding it. If you are searching for health go and talk to D. L. B. Jones, Chiropractor, 105 Park Ave., and you will find that her explanation of the principles appeals to your reason.

STUMPED A SQUIRREL HUNTER

Was a Member of a Famous Brave Band Which Was Waiting the Rebel Morgan.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, Dec. 13, 1909

MR. A. J. STROUD,
Horton Bay, Charlevoix Co., Mich.

Dear Sir: Please find enclosed Warrant No. 1051, on the Treasurer of the state, payable to your order for thirteen ($13.00) dollars, being amount due you from Squirrel Hunter Claims.

I have the honor to be,
Yours very truly,
E. M. Cullington,
Auditor of State.

Hon. A. J. Stroud of Horton Bay is very proud over the above letter, says the Boyne Journal, and a draft that he recently received from the Auditor's Department of the state of Ohio.

At one time during the Civil War there was great fear that Morgan's men would come up the Ohio river and make raids on property near Cincinnati. At that time much excitement prevailed among the northern sympathizers and the boys in the neighborhood banded together into a company that was about as financial strong, armed themselves with a old shot guns, squirrel rifles, horse pistols and any kind of weapons that could be secured. They encamped on the bank of the Ohio River and patiently awaited the rebel. Morgan, however, did not come their way, and after being encamped for about a month they disbanded and were given discharges by the Department.

The state of Ohio has always been very proud of the loyalty shown by those young men and a short time ago appropriated enough money to pay those boys for their service which lasted one month. The appropriation was made for the benefit of the "squirrel hunters," for that was the name given by the soldiers.

The check referred to above is a check for thirteen dollars, issued to Mr. Stroud in payment for his services and in recognition of his bravery.

Some time ago the Judge noticed something in a newspaper about the "Squirrel Hunters" had having been applied and carefully scrutinized his list. F. E. Knowles with the announcement that he was one of the original squirrel hunters. The result was that Knowles got the matter up for his boss with the foregoing result.

The Northern Michigan Apple Boom.

Benjamin Newhall, the retired apple orchardist, owns a big place on South Manitou Island and has planted a large apple orchard on it. He is interested in a scheme to reclaim Michigan apple orchards, and when talking to a representative a report is about the western coast, said that there were more apple trees in Michigan than in all the west, and that all of them are in bearing condition, but only a trifling percentage of them were well cared for and produced good fruit. Mr. Newhall claims that the neglected Michigan orchards can be secured for a small part of what it costs to orchards east, and that with the freight rates in favor of Michigan, more profit could be secured from a level crop than in the northwest. A Michigan orchard is a good investment, as long such orchards in good condition. Mr. Newhall predicts that people will understand this shortly, and that the easiest way to get rich will be to go about supplying the east with the bulk of its fruit.

Men Must Differ Free

Inside this, "I want to go on record as saying that I regard Dorothy Dix as one of the greatest gifts that God has made to women," writes Rev. G. Underwood, of Yonkers, N. Y., "I can never forget what it has done for me." This phrase needs a gloss: a woman lost her spirit, vigor or body and habitual health. It typically gives nervousness, sleeplessness, nervousness, headache, backache, falling and dizzy spells, soon builds up the week, ailing and sickly. Try these 20c at R. G. Hite & Co.

SEEKING THE CAUSE.

He Went the Right Way About it and Was Successful.

By RICHARD BARKER SHELTON.
(Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.)

Bobby Brulwick, dictating some important letters to his stenographer, glanced abstractedly at the handful of mail the office boy laid on the desk before him. Among the envelopes he caught sight of one that he hurriedly separated from its fellows and, with quickening pulses, glanced at the superscription in a firm, familiar hand.

"Hr—just a minute, Miss Stone," said he, opening the envelope and drawing out its contents.

The stenographer set tapping her pencil upon the end in her lap, while Brulwick, his brows unusually pucker, ing in a frown, read the letter attentively. The epistle ran:

Dear Bobby—It is impossible—impossible! I know from the way you looked that you don't—can't—care for me. I was a fool to think I could make you love me. Well, I'm going to the right way to get over it. I'm going to the Klondike. I know I can get over it there. I know I can. I know I can. Good-bye, Bobby, and that we may meet as friends I am

Yours, ELEANOR.

This afternoon on the Avenue I saw you speaking to Miss Pauline Darlington and, knowing that she is your—or at least one of your—best friends, I ventured to speak to her. I told her what I had seen and asked her if she knew what was the matter with you. She said she did and that we must speak with all haste.

We met at tea this afternoon on the Avenue for two minutes on the subject. Pauline frankly told me what was wrong, and we parted friends.

For a moment Bobby sat like a man stunned by some crushing blow. His eyes staring straight ahead and his letter crumpled in his hand. Then suddenly he swung about to his desk—swung as his chair so violently that the stenographer jumped nervously and dropped her pencil.

She picked it up hurriedly, amazed at the power of the pod and turned alertly to Brulwick as if expecting him to continue the dictation. But Bobby was rummaging through the pigeonholes of the desk, throwing things right and left in a veritable frenzy of haste. The stenographer took off her pencil a puzzled frown, evidently by way the culmet of mortals.

"YOU ARE MAKING IT A SUPERNATURAL CASE," SAID HE.

and this unmountable flurry of his upset all her preconceived ideas of the man.

"The letter I was taking, Mr Brulwick" she suggested tentatively.

"Letter?" Bobby repeated. "Letter! Oh, yes! Never mind it now. Alone will finish 'em up. Tell him I say for him to look after the matter as best he can and—by—send Harding in, will you please? Send him in immediately if you will."

The stenographer, her bewilderment increased rather than lessened by the manner of her employer, hurried into the next office to deliver the message. A moment later Harding pushed through the door of Brulwick's private office and stood waiting at the man before the desk.

"Harding, old boy, what's my?" he stammeringly. "What's wrong with me?"

"Why, said Bobby without looking up, "say what time does the Avenue get this afternoon? Do you know?"

He shot out the question in a flash so that confused to him that if the man before him was unable to answer the question it might go hard with him.

"Your clothes, I believe," said Harding.

Brulwick glanced at the cuffs on the well and jumped as if he felt so quickly that his desk chair overturned with a crash.

"Your clothes!" Bobby fairly howled. "Don't tell me that! It's ten minutes of 4 now! Say, something's got to be done! Send Jim down for a cab! Tell him I'll bet at the curb by the time I get down his life won't be worth 2 cents!"

Harding gave one perturbed glance at the partner, started to remonstrate, thought better of it and hurtled headlong through the door, bellowing loud for the office boy. Bobby meanwhile caught up his hat and his overcoat, tore through the outer office and sped down the long corridor toward the elevator. At the back, pointing and sadly disturbed, came Harding.

"See, what's the row anyway?" he demanded as Bobby paused and jiggled his watch. "Where are you going in all this rush, Bobby?"

The elevator came whirring up, Bobby jumped into it.

"Don't know yet where I may land," he called as the descent began. "Use your imagination!"

The cab Jim had summoned was just drawing up to the curb as Bobby shot sudden from the building.

"Per 56!" he bellowed at the cabby as he tumbled in. "Let the beast out. I'll make it well worth your while."

They reached the plot after a mad gallop. On the wheel was a scattering crowd, and on to the center the Avenue was making her way majestically toward the bay. Bobby groaned his eyes fell on a tug moored to the wharf. Thither he sped. A few words to the tug fired man seating out of her pilot house window, a display of greenbacks on Bobby's part, and the bitter moped steard and the tug was speeding after the departing liner.

Down the bay went the liner, and after her at full speed raced the tug, stirring up a great commotion.

As they neared the Avenue the tug's whistle begun to scream. The liner's whistle answered with deep throated brays. Closer drew the tug, and over the liner's side was dropped the dangling length of the Jacob's ladder, at the top of which a crowd of excited passengers watched the encroaching tug.

Presently they were alongside, then with caught the ladder and scrambled up to the liner's deck.

"Good work!" a big man who had been hurling excitedly over the rail declared heartily as Bobby reached the Avenue's deck.

Bobby said nothing. He caught sight of a pretty girl on the outskirts of the watching group and in a manner determined fashion made his way straight to her side. Her lips were parted. A beautiful color was in her cheeks.

Bobby—that his last said something to her in a low voice and in a masterful fashion led her away.

No other word passed between them until they found a quiet nook to themselves for art. Then the girl turned to him.

"Well?" she said quietly.

"I got your letter," said Bobby.

She was silent.

"That is why I am here," he went on. Still she said nothing.

"I'm mighty sorry to have to make you—you—spectacular a fresh jon, but there was really no other way," said he.

"Why was it so very necessary for you to come at all?"

Bobby noticed that her eyes refused to meet his own. Somehow he felt suddenly glad of this.

"Why?" he echoed. "Good heavens, don't you know? Don't you know why I'm here? Did you imagine for a minute that I could let you go like that? I think I would sin enough by accepting it at all—without a murmur."

He came a step nearer. He noticed she was trembling.

"I came for good and specific reasons," he went on gently. "I came to tell you that I am the most unlucky in the whole thing was that letter you wrote me; that you didn't mean it, and that if it that you didn't write it of your own free will and volition the outside influence was brought to bear upon you. Tell me that, Ethlor."

"Suppose you are all wrong," she suggested. "Suppose there was no outside influence, or you chose to call it. Suppose I usurpt that letter and wrote it because I meant it."

He gave a shout. He looked at her as if he did not dare believe his eyes. Then the fire cell.

"You are making it a supposition case," said he. "Why not make it plain, bald statement?"

There was something like a sob, "I can't," she faltered.

A great light came into Bobby Brulwick's eyes. Firmly unmindful of the little crowd over by, he took her hand in his own.

"I know it," he declared triumphantly. "I know it, too."

The sunbeam he began to chuckle softly.

"Now, who on earth is going to break this news to Aunt Agatha you or I?" he inquired moptly.

Errors of Alma-Tadema.

In spite of all the pains I have taken to be accurate in matters of archaeology I have often been reminded how easy it is to fall short of absolute perfection. There is always some one whose specialty enables him to know more than you do on some particular point, and, besides, there are many details about which classical archaeology is uncertain or silent. Once, for instance, I introduced a sunflower into one of my pictures, thinking it belonged to the Jerusalem artichoke family, I was quite safe in this. Alas, I learned too late that the sunflower and its forty species are quite a modern importation from South America! Nor was this the only incidental slip of which I have been accused. In one of my Roman canvases I am said to have introduced the Cloaciae Jackstraw, credit for whose discovery belongs to the gentleman whose name it bears. In "Sappho" I was told by a critic that I had painted a seat which is not the Greek fashion of lyre. This time I was right, for the name test is to be found on vases of Greek vases.—Alma-Tadema to Samuel Magazine.

KING LEOPOLD IS DEAD; ALBERT THE NEW RULER

Death from Embolism Comes Suddenly to Aged Patient in His Royal Abode.

LONG LIFE OF BELGIUM'S KING

Monarch Often Denounced for Atrocities in Congo and Shocking Gallantries with Women.

King Leopold of Belgium died at 2:47 o'clock Friday morning, his aged and wasted body being unable to stand the strain put upon it. The collapse occurred suddenly and at a moment when the doctors seemingly had the greatest hopes for his recovery. The king's death, it was announced by Dr. De Page, was due to embolism, a small blood clot probably being carried to the heart.

Thus being no direct hereditary heir, the crown passes to Prince Albert, the only son of Leopold's brother, the late Phillipse, count of Flanders. The announcement was born on April 8, 1875, and on Oct. 2, 1900, married Princess Elizabeth of Bavaria. They have three children, Prince Leopold, 8 years old; Prince Charles, 6 years old, and Princess Marie Jose, who was born on Aug. 4, 1906. Prince Albert is one of the most popular members of the reigning house of Belgium. His wife is equally popular, their house life being such as to attract the admiration and love of the people. Prince Albert has traveled extensively and is a man of affairs.

King Leopold was the ruler of Belgium when the death of his father, who was King Leopold I, on Dec. 10, 1865. He ascended the throne and grew in importance and glory as the king of the Belgians was a monarch of a little realm. He set up the policy of Ring Isolation for the model for Belgium; and from the moment he became ruler he never ceased to urge the doctrine of colonization and extension of trade, through a merchant marine and through sending samples of Belgian manufacture to all parts of the world. This country is known as the "laboratory of Europe."

The king was born in Brussels on April 9, 1835, and on Aug. 22, 1853, he married the Archduchess Marie of Austria, who died in 1902. Four children were born of this marriage, the duke of Brabant, who died in January, 1869, at the age of 10, and three daughters. The eldest of these, Princess Louise, was born 15 1858 and married to Prince Philip of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. The second daughter, Stephanie, who was born in 1864, was married to Rudolph, crown prince and heir to the Austrian emperor, since the death of whom in 1889 she has caused much or much scandal in Europe as her father. The third daughter is the Princess Clementine. After the death of his wife, King Leopold morganatically married Baroness Vaughan, by whom he has two young sons.

King Leopold's fame of gallantry dates back to the days of Cora Pearl, whose adventures amused Europe to the middle of the last century. The women involved since then range from ladies of the court to music hall performers.

14 CITIES VOTE DRY AGAIN.

Mayor Elected in Salem, Mass., Committed Causeway from Jail.

Lirenna was again the paramount issue in the municipal elections in Massachusetts cities. Worcester went into the "wet" column by 3,179 votes, as two years of its license, while the "dry" majority of 8,955 of a year ago was reduced to 2,197 for the 18 town municipalities. Salem went back to no license for 5th years after one year of license. Mayor John F. Hurley was defeated in Salem by Arthur Prince, a saloon keeper, who has been a resident of the city only a year, during which time he has conducted a strenuous campaign, editing his paper for a time from jail because of a libel suit.

AT IT AGAIN

ZELAYA RESIGNS PRESIDENCY.

Nicaraguan Dictator Says That He Is Ready to Give Up Office.

Jose Santos Zelaya has resigned from the presidency of Nicaragua. He placed his resignation in the hands of Congress at Managua the other day. Apparently there was no other course for him to take. The people were at last aroused. The guns of the revolutionists threatened. The warships of the United States lay in Nicaraguan ports.

Managua had been seething for days. The spirit of revolt had spread even to the gates of the palace. Zelaya surrounded himself with an armed guard. Unchecked, the populace marched through the streets, crying for the end of the old and proclaiming the new regime.

Who will take up the reins no one knows or cares. It is sufficient that Zelaya as dictator will be known no more. There is no doubt that Congress will act quickly on his resignation, for the people have demanded it.

RICHES FOR A WANDERER.

Newspaper Clipping Leads Man to Where Brother Died.

Attracted by a newspaper clipping which said his brother had died in Boston intestate, leaving a fortune of $250,000, James F. Corbett, for thirty years of wandering in Canada, England and the United States, has returned to Boston to lay claim to a share of the estate of William J. Corbett, who died on Sept. 23. Rival claimants enter for the first shot of an "ever." brother, lawyers and newspaper men sought out Corbett on his arrival at the South station and eventually the police had to take a hand to insure the men go back to a place of retreat.

FIVE PROBABLY PERISHED.

Fireman Also Killed in Destruction of Building at Philadelphia.

At least five persons perished in the six-story building occupied by Schrack & Sherwood, manufacturers of men's clothing, which was destroyed by fire in Philadelphia, are thought to be the men they lost their lives. Joseph Tonor, a fireman, was killed. He gave up his life in searching for the missing on the lower floors of the building while the upper part of the structure was in flames. A score of others sustained burns and other injuries.

Shortly after the outset of the work on the fifth floor the walls were discovered on the floor below. The assistance of policemen and firemen the majority escaped, but some were carried out unconscious from the smoke.

Its full force has not yet been brought to be extended to the office of the Senate, and to advanced retiring allowance.

34 FREEZE IN MIDLAKE.

Crew of Wrecked Steamer Marooned Without Food or Fuel.

On a tiny island in Lake Huron thirty-four members of the crew of the wrecked steamer Wissahickon, the other day were marooned without food or fire. All of the food supply was under water. When the steamer struck the crew made shore safely, though drenched to the skin. The island is only a few acres in extent and while it has some drift wood there is hardly enough to keep the men from freezing. On Wednesday a tiny fishing gasoline launch from Manitoulin Island passed the island and sighted the wreck. There was only room aboard for Mate J. H. Casey and Engineer E. J. Erskine, and they were taken to Manitoulin Island, where there is a cable to the main land. Later tugs left Sault Ste. Marie to rescue the men.

The train is the Sioux City and Des Moines local out of Chicago and carried passengers for those cities. The passenger train behind it following, was delayed less than an hour by the wreck. The track was soon cleared and the Sioux City train proceeded.

POLITICS and POLITICIANS

Stand-pat Republicans do not like the clamor from various quarters for further revision of the tariff by the present Congress.

Eugene V. Debs the national leader of the Socialists, has written a Topeka, made the prediction that "next year will witness the election of the first Socialist Congressman," but did not say which of the states.

Henry Dover, who entered politics with the late Senator Hanna, Ohioan, and acted as his secretary, has decided to quit politics and has become a real estate officer for a firm of Chicago bankers. Dover was Hanna's right hand man, and held the position of secretary of the Republican National Committee.

Mrs. Mary Lease, who was once Congressman Fowler of New Jersey, introduced a resolution in favor of a grant of land for a permanent tariff commission, which resolution, with Senators Cannon and Aldrich, Hill bill, appear on the concert of the waterways commission rates and that a commission of fifteen shall investigate the actual rates within three months.

Vice President James S. Sherman is a strong advocate of the idea that the administration we intend to still further perfect the machinery, he intends to start the rehabilitation of its ship subsidy bill, which failed to further improve our methods of federal regulation. We shall title an serious and effectively the conservation of our natural resources and the matter of inland waterways."

In the course of his series of addresses in Texas before arriving on his travels to tropical climes, W. J. Bryan said at Galveston that he had been criticised in past years for his advocacy of the doctrine that it is the duty of the strong to help the weak, but he did not mind saying that he believed in it still. He said he was in accordance with 99 per cent of the worldly Republicans would have to pay.

In his speech at the Civic Federation banquet in New York, Senator Root said: "Government by injunction is the Federal government, is breaking down under the weight of the contention of authority and called a halt. He said: "We should be sure to give his population too numerous, its inexperience, its ignorance, its liability to say nothing of the enormous increase that we can see before us in the future, to be governed as to the great range of its activities from one central power in Washington."

DR. COOK IN DENMARK.

Brother Gets Letter from Explorer, Who Awaits Copenhagen Verdict.

Dr. Frederick A. Cook, whose mysterious disappearance from the Canadian line, Brooksville, on Nov. 24, caused a sensation, is in Europe. The positive announcement was made by William L. Cook of Brooklyn, who received a letter from his brother.

Without adopting a disguise, Dr. Cook left New York on the Caronia of the Cunard line, on Saturday, Nov. 27, and arrived in Naples on Dec. 11, five days after the affidavits of George H. Dinkle, an insurance agent, and Captain August W. Loose, a navigator, were refused in New York and London. Although it was announced on the morning of Nov. 25—several hours before the vessel steamed from New York—that Dr. Cook would leave on the Caronia, and notwithstanding the fact that more than a score of reporters searched the vessel for the explorer, Dr. Cook succeeded in getting out of New York and reaching Italy without being recognized. He remained in Naples for several days and then left for Denmark to remain in close call of the committee of scientists now engaged in examining his polar data.

The disappearance of Dr. Cook is likely to cause him done. The committee of the Geological Society, which for the late Phillipse, count of Flanders. The announcement was born on April 8, 1875, and on Oct. 2, 1900, married Princess Elizabeth of Bavaria. They have three children, Prince Leopold, 8 years old; Prince Charles, 6 years old, and Princess Marie Jose, who was born on Aug. 4, 1906. Prince Albert is one of the most popular members of the reigning house of Belgium. His wife is equally popular, their house life being such as to attract the admiration and love of the people. Prince Albert has traveled extensively and is a man of affairs.

King Leopold was the ruler of Belgium when the death of his father, who was King Leopold I, on Dec. 10, 1865. He ascended the throne and grew in importance and glory as the king of the Belgians was a monarch of a little realm. He set up the policy of Ring Isolation for the model for Belgium; and from the moment he became ruler he never ceased to urge the doctrine of colonization and extension of trade, through a merchant marine and through sending samples of Belgian manufacture to all parts of the world. This country is known as the "laboratory of Europe."

The king was born in Brussels on April 9, 1835, and on Aug. 22, 1853, he married the Archduchess Marie of Austria, who died in 1902. Four children were born of this marriage, the duke of Brabant, who died in January, 1869, at the age of 10, and three daughters. The eldest of these, Princess Louise, was born 15 1858 and married to Prince Philip of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. The second daughter, Stephanie, who was born in 1864, was married to Rudolph, crown prince and heir to the Austrian emperor, since the death of whom in 1889 she has caused much or much scandal in Europe as her father. The third daughter is the Princess Clementine. After the death of his wife, King Leopold morganatically married Baroness Vaughan, by whom he has two young sons.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Chicago Trade says: "Indications of the same good feeling in all business lines are confined wholly to concerns preparing for their annual inventories and necessary repairs. All other activities testify to expanding efforts to increase production. Many deliveries have to be completed within the next two weeks and extra pressure is placed upon facilities in metal and wood-working. Finished products and general merchandise figure to an exceptional extent in freight forwarding. There is also an increased movement of live stock and some of the principal raw materials, but the recent snowy weather caused decreased marketings of breadstuffs.

"The general demand for seasonable goods reflects a stronger purchasing power. This is conspicuous in the leading retail lines here and in the interior. Estimates of the Christmas trade compare favorably with all previous records. Buying remains good for spring merchandise and the outlook is exceedingly good for wholesalers of dry goods, woolens, clothing, footwear and food products. Operations in the leading industries reflect sustained activity. New enterprises increase in number and capital investment, and include another large plant at Gary and numerous additions to mercantile lines on State street. Payments generally are fully maintained, expansion in commerce. Money is in wider request and there is little prospect of an early reduction in rates.

"Bank clearings, $296,590,546, exceed those last week by 15.7 per cent, compared with 1908 by 12.7 per cent, and compare with $229,000,000 in 1907.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district number 28, against 20 last week, 16 in the week of Feb. 4 last year. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 18, against 17 last week, 13 in 1908 and 12 in 1907."

NEW YORK.

The retail and holiday trade has been helped by seasonable weather and the approach of Christmas and makes good comparisons with preceding years in the markets, in fact, reporting a record turnover for the season. Jobbing trade reports are cheerful, with special stress laid upon the volume of renewed demand to fill broken lots. The wholesale trade and the demand from manufacturers tend to assume a more steadfast tone.

GUILTY OF SLAYING WIFE

Battle Creek Man Is Convicted of First Degree Murder.

William Vandell faces a life sentence in State prison for the murder of his wife in Black Creek last August. The jury in the Kalamazoo court found him guilty of murder in the first degree, after being out an hour and a half. Crandall heard the verdict coolly. He cut his wife's throat and then attempted to end his own life in the same manner, but failed to cut a fatal wound in his neck. He took the stand in his own behalf and said that his wife had tried to kill him and then took her own life. Crandall is married to Hattie Taylor, who he married and the tragedy occurred in a boarding house kept by his wife.

FIND BODY OF SLAIN GIRL.

Helen Brown Attacked and Beaten to Death in Detroit.

The murder of Helen Brown, 13 years old, of 271 Third avenue, Detroit, was revealed by finding of the child's body lying half frozen in Whitmarsh's truck shipping yard at 8 Jones street. The child's face and head were frightfully cut and battered and there were indications that she had been mistreated. Her hat by Bertha Jen Jeay, the girl's friend, apparently she had made a desperate fight for her life. Footprints in the snow along the east side of the yard showed where the murderer had led his victim to her fate. The police hold one prisoner on suspicion in connection with the case. The prisoner is a young man who has been a neighbor of the Browns but who declares he never knew the child who was killed. He has a witness who gives him an alibi, accounting for all of his time. But the police assert that their prisoner was arrested two years ago in connection with an attack on a 9-year-old girl, although no case was made out against him at that time.

Widow and Children of Overland Man Will Not Come.

County Clerk Humphrey has learned that DeWilliamson, who was sought by a Washington, D. C., attorney and for whom a considerable fortune is waiting, died at Lincoln, Neb., a year ago. Clerk Humphrey has been unable to find the widow and children of DeWilliamson, who left Lansing, Mich., a year ago, but he has learned that the widow and children are living in Carson City, where they have been for the last year.

FEDERAL REPORT SHOWS BIG CROPS

Agricultural Department's Final Figures Indicate Prosperity on the Farms.

ENORMOUS YIELD OF WHEAT

Oats in the Billion Bushel Class and Corn Returns Register an Increase.

The final crop figures for the year 1909 have been issued by the Department of Agriculture estimates of his acreage, production, and value of the farms of all the leading products being given out. The report showed that the last season has been one of unprecedented prosperity on the part of the farmers. The wheat crop was the larger ever raised with one exception, form the second largest, and oats broke into the billion bushel class with a total yield of 1,007,000,000 bushels. While in some instances the average value of the farm was slightly lower than last year, the total value of the crops raised was unquestionably the largest ever raised.

The average value of winter wheat on the farm reached the unprecedented level of approximately $1.01, while spring wheat was called 91.2 cents. Rye sold for the great price of $1.05. The average price for corn was slightly lower than a year ago, but with the increase in the crop more than made up for the loss in that direction. The yield of wheat was increased quite a little over the preliminary figures published in the fall, on account of a revision in acreage, and the total yield of spring and winter wheat combined was 737,189,000 bushels, compared to 664,000,000 bushels a year ago.

The report on oats furnished the biggest surprise, the bureau figures showing a total crop of 1,087,000,000 bushels, or the largest crop ever raised. The preliminary estimate was increased 24,000,000 bushels. The largest previous crop of oats was in 1907, when the yield was 1,026,000,000 bushels smaller than the last season. The average value of oats on the farm was given at 40.5 cents, against 47.2 cents a year ago. The total value of the crop, however, was placed at $440,174,000, compared to $381,171,000 in 1908.

The final figures on the corn crop, indicating a total estimate of 2,772,000,000 bushels, compared to a November estimate of 2,767,316,000 bushels, and a final report a year ago of 2,505,651,000 bushels, did not reflect any material change to the crop during the last month.

Many private reports have been received since the last report that the crop suffered material deterioration. The quality of the crop was reduced, but the government was also higher than expected, at 84.2, compared to 86.9 in 1908.

The most sensational advance in prices last year was in potatoes, notwithstanding the fact that the crop raised, 25,556,000 bushels, was practically the same as last year. The average value per bushel on the farm was placed at 62.7 cents, compared to 118.4 in 1908. The potatoes crop was nearly 100,000,000 bushels larger than a year ago.

Political Comment.

Latin American and Zelaya.

When Secretary Knox's blunt letter handing passports to the Nicaraguan charge at Washington was first made public, the general comment was complimentary of the Administration's evident intention to put an end to Zelaya's tin Central America.

In the chorus of approval, however, there were a few discordant notes. Some of the critical New York newspapers gave value to a fear that Mr. Knox had been overhasty, and that he had not sufficiently weighed the dangers of being misunderstood in South America. It was pointed out that Secretary Root had by his official visits to the capitals of Latin America at last succeeded in extirpating the false notion that Uncle Sam was hungry for territory, and was thus prone to interfere under cover of the Monroe Doctrine where he really had no business. This idea had gained currency, and the recent visits of the Secretary of State to the Southern Republics were running to their full capacity, the cotton-growing and manufacturing interests of the South were thinking their out on account of high prices.

It is already evident, however, that these timorous suggestions were quite without warrant. Assurances from the more stable and important Latin American republics that the work we propose to do on the isthmus will be as welcome as it is necessary. No doubt the fact that Washington has been scrupulously careful to consult Mexico at every stage of the proceeding, for fear that the approval and support of the Diaz government would be withheld, has had much to remove any lingering suspicions of our real motives from South American capitals.

They are well informed in Buenos Ayres, in Santiago de Chile, in Rio Janeiro, in Lima and in Montevideo. They know almost as well as we do how disgraceful has been Zelaya's monstrous rule in Nicaragua, and how intolerable it has become. They realize how near a neighbor Nicaragua is to Panama, and how North American interests are and must be pack mount in that region. They know that Nicaraguan ills come to Latin America civilization because of the revolutionists, and because of tyrannous dictatorships like those of Castro and Zelaya. They were glad to see the fall of Venezuela set in the path of progress, just as they will now be glad to see the reproach of Zelayism removed from the isthmus. And the adhesion of Mexico to our program is sufficient to show them that Washington has no ulterior territorial ambitions to satisfy.—Minneapol

DEATH OF D. C. LEACH

Grand Traverse Pioneer Gone to His Eternal Rest.

News has been received of the death of Hon. De Witt C. Leach, at his home in Springfield, Mo., Tuesday night, of last week. Infirmities due to his advanced age, he had passed 87, were the cause.

The Hon. De Witt C. Leach was a most excellent example of the older time self-educated boys who have won successes and honors in life.

Mr. Leach was born in Clarence, Erie county, N. Y., Nov. 23, 1822. His early boyhood was spent in western New York, northern Ohio and central Michigan.

In 1855 Mr. Leach was appointed by Gov. Bingham, state librarian, and was the governor's private secretary after the adjournment of the legislature, and had charge of the executive office a large part of the time, the governor spending but little time at Lansing. Mr. Leach was the first editor of the Lansing Republican, at first in connection with Rufus Hosmer and after a few months sole editor, until he was nominated for congress on the republican ticket, at Pontiac, in the old Fourth district, in the fall of 1856. This district at that time embraced all of Michigan north of that point and including the upper peninsula. It was an empire in extent and undeveloped wealth.

In 1860 Mr. Leach declined a renomination. In March 1861 he was appointed Indian Agent for Michigan, by President Lincoln, and served four years. During all this time the duties of this trying office were performed in such a thorough and satisfactory manner that there was never a word of complaint or criticism from any source, from friend or foe.

During this period, the duties of his office often brought Mr. Leach to Grand Traverse and upon his retirement from office he moved his family there in September, 1865, and at once took a prominent position. In 1867 he was elected a member of the constitutional convention for the revision of the state constitution; was appointed commissioner to locate the Traverse Bay and Houghton Lake street road; was actively interested in the organization of the Grand Traverse Union Agricultural Society, and served repeatedly as officer and director; built the state road extending from Traverse City to Charlevoix.

In 1867 Mr. Leach bought the Grand Traverse Herald of Morgan Bates, and during his nine years of ownership and editorship took an earnest and effective part in the work of the republican party, and the material development and prosperity of the Grand Traverse region. In May, 1876, he sold the Herald to Thos. T. Bates and removed to Springfield, Mo., where his son-in-law, Mr. Hatfield, had gone a few months before. We are indebted to the Traverse City Record for the above record of Mr. Leach's honorable and useful life.

The life of Mr. Leach during his years of residence in the Grand Traverse region was linked with the early history of Charlevoix. In addition to his construction of the State road, as related above, he was for a time a partner of the late John S. Dixon, in the ownership of the land which now constitutes the corporation boundaries of the city of Charlevoix, and it is a fact that he proposed and was enthusiastically in favor of damming the upper channel for water power, but the Dixons would not consent.

Mr. Leach was the owner of the SENTINEL from March 1869 to April 1870. The particulars of the founding of the SENTINEL can be best related by printing an extract from an address delivered by the writer at the Northern Michigan Press Club banquet at Manistee November 3d.

"Early in January, '69, Bertin C. Leach the editor and proprietor of the Grand Traverse Herald, came for an and inspected the thirteen ibs that he was about to establish a paper at Pine River (now Charlevoix) and that he had entered as for its publisher. I had but attained my majority, and the proposition took my wind for the moment. On the condition voluntarily stimulated by Mr. Leach that I should pay a giant at the end of one year if I so desired, I assumed and at once assumed the employ in the Herald office. Over on a foreman was the late Morgan Bates, who afterward resided mathin the as an author. I have ever since gratefully remembered the free transfer of counsel and encouragement that were given me when I left the Herald office and struck out for myself. They were spoken by the kindest my foreman, the late former Lieut. Gov. Morgan Bates, the founder of the Herald. My boy, work hard and you will succeed.

"Early in February of that year I assembled from the scraps of the Herald the sixteen pages which, with I established the Sentinel, and which included the Washington head-press upon which the first issue of the Herald was printed. The plant consisted of two cases and stands in the exhibited a February blizzard, I hold and two days later by same partner four miles distant for fuel and transportation of my trunk. I walked half the way from Traverse City to Atwood, Antrim county, sinking the snow and the two fellow passengers in the energy of 5 bushels of oats by the bad bills. I chartered the stage at Atwood, in call on the young lady who was after 12:00 for foreman, with which the following day I walked to Pine River through 2 inches of snow. Charlevoix has not just officially taken its place upon the map of Michigan. It was merely a small fishing outlet and sawdust point for lake steamers. It had no harbor and population was confined to about one dozen white families. You will doubtless wonder why a field of this character should be selected for a newspaper venture, but when I tell you that for the first three years the business passed the two factors of competition Chippewa Merchant Clothing and Blount, Charlevoix and Moody a store, will cease to wonder.

"The first issue was printed immediately upon its date, the first Monday in April, when the sun passed that winter position Charlevoix merely took effect. The issue was ushered in by Vernal geniality and justifiers my choice of being the publisher of the Herald, as well as Chief Editor. During the first year the issue of Mr. Leach appeared on the head of the editorial column as proprietor and my name as publisher. At the beginning of the second year I assumed both titles."

The publisher of this paper has always entertained a feeling for Mr. Leach not less warm than that of a son for a father, because of the faith that he had, forty-one years ago, in an orphan printer boy.

Important Disclosure.

An Associated Press special to the Grand Rapids Herald gives Gov. Warner's interpretation of Michigan's new primary law.

This is imperfect if true.

The special also says that Governor Warner's statement is clear and concise.

This is also of vital importance.

If Governor Warner can "clearly and concisely" interpret the Michigan primary law he should be created U. L. D.

And while he is "interpreting" it might be well for him to give us an interpretation of why he was elected governor of Michigan for a third term.

The latter fact has but one parallel in modern history, and that is Dr. Cook's discovery of the north pole.

1910.

As this week goes out and backward into the past one year 1909 goes with it—the new year, as if custom of its powerful predecessor, carrying with it one day of the Christmas week as tribute.

To the old, as the years pass, the boundaries of the terrestrial future can almost be marked without a very far reach; to the young the future means very much or very little, proportionate to opportunities grasped or thoughtlessly passed.

Young man, what of the New Year? Start to "welcome" in your life that marks future weal or woe? Traditionally the first day of the New Year is the day of regrets and resolves, of regrets for mistakes made and promises for their future avoidance. Make good resolves to yourself next Saturday morning and keep them.

Cultivate manliness, walk erect, look every person you meet squarely in the eye; "be honest and all be true, and it shall follow as the night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man."

A happy New Year to every young man and woman in Charlevoix! Ambitious for the balance of the world we have no particular solicitude. Let other philosophers and philanthropists outside our particular charge care for their souls.

Ingalls—Rice.

On Thursday evening, Dec. 23d, the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Ingalls, of Marion township, was the scene of a joyous wedding festivity, when about fifty friends and relatives gathered to witness the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Ingalls's oldest daughter, Anna Gertrude to Fred James Rice.

The impressive wedding ceremony was spoken by Rev. F. Dewey Hale at 7:30 p. m.

The young couple were attended by Miss Bessie Straw and Mr. Samuel Straw, while the wedding march was played by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Smith.

After congratulations and an inspection of the many and beautiful gifts, the guests sat down to a sumptuous wedding supper, which had been prepared by the bride and served by some of her friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Rice are away on a wedding trip, but will be at home to their many friends in their new home on the Ingalls homestead after Jan. 10.

Northport has voted to build a new school house.

A. J. Dice of Bellaire, was elected president of the state association of superintendents of the poor in convention at Flint last week.

Northport has a good big fruit grower's association, and East Jordan is organizing along the same line. What about the west side of Charlevoix county.

East Jordan Herald: John Chase, a well known resident of this section, died at the County Farm last Friday of paresis, aged 62 years. The burial took place Monday in the Jones cemetery. Deceased was a brother-in-law of Solomon Jones and had other distant relatives hereabouts. Mr. Chase was a victim of our liquor habit, but in spite of this great drawback was noted for his absolute honesty.

Traverse City Eagle: At a meeting of the Northern Michigan Poultry association to be held in the office of Dr. Griswold & Umlor this evening the plans for the eighth annual show will be matured. Already it is planned that T. M. Campbell, of Darlington, Md., whose judging last year was so satisfactory, shall pass upon the birds at the coming show. Mr. Campbell is an experienced judge, and with him doing the scoring there is no doubt but there will be fair play. Traverse City is becoming headquarters for the agricultural interests of northern western Michigan, and this bird show is one of the many things which has helped the city to get to the front and now makes it possible for her to lead the procession. There is little, if any, doubt but that there will be a good attendance on hand at this evening's meeting to perfect the details. It is expected that several parties who are anxious to get into the bird showing game will be on hand with their applications for membership in the association.

Boyne Journal: An industrial proposition in which one of our lumbermen is interested, and which is of considerable magnitude as it involves an amount of timber into the hundreds of thousands, has been consummated within the past few weeks. It will be of interest to our readers from the fact that the prime mover in the enterprise is John Grund, of this city. The Wallton Lake Lumber Co., of which Mr. Grund is the active head, has purchased all of the timber holding of the Henry Stacy Lumber Co., at Arcadia. Arcadia is located in Manistee county, on a line just looked further about 12 miles south of Frankfort. The Wallton Lake Lumber Co. is composed of John Grund of this city, Ralph Case of Kingsley, and J. G. Crotser of Traverse City. Three gentlemen, with Mr. Grund as manager, operated for several years at Wallton Lake, five miles north of this city, with such signal success that upon the completion of their operations there the company was incorporated under the above name for a continuance of the lumber business.

—Geo. Glados & Gust Hotsakes have purchased the confectionery business at Traverse City, of the American Dump Co. Geo. Glados left Monday for that place, where he will remain about two weeks. Mr. Hotsakes will be manager at that place.

—Baxter W. H. C. will hold their installation of officers at the Odd Fellows hall Thursday, Jan. 13, at 2 p. m., after which a six o'clock dinner will be served in the dining hall to the members of the Baxter Post, their wives and immediate families. A social evening, with short program, will follow the supper and it is hoped that all members will come and have a good time.

—Charlevoix is feeling quite well, thank you! She has a sugar factory that will be making sugar after the trees are all sawed up; she has the big Petty seed warehouse that is built to stay, and it will soon have a cement plant that will be shipping its product long after the last lumber laden vessel sails through the Charlevoix bridge. And to these will soon be added a second saltcoat.

—Thursday City Eagle: On complaint of Deputy Game Warden G. A. Smith, Charles Anderson, John Wilder man and B. J. Wilkerson appeared before Justice Wickham at Frankfort Friday and pleaded not guilty to the charge of having trout and whitefish in their possession during the closed season. Their trial was set for January 11. The complaint was issued on December 14 and the warrant on December 23. There were four in the party, but the fourth man left for other parts before he could be apprehended. The men were operating a gasoline tug from Charlevoix and the Manitou Islands.

—Judge Willis Brown, of the Bay City Co., was in town a short time this week.

—Bert Wilbur returned to Chicago Monday to remain the balance of the winter.

—Capt. Geo. A. Newberry is in the city for a rest of two weeks. Capt. Newberry has severed his connection with the Salvation Army and is now in charge of the Central Rescue Mission, of Saginaw. A circular signed by a number of leading Saginaw citizens says: "Through the efforts of Mr. Newberry and the aid of citizens who appreciate the good work being done in helping the poor and outcast and rescuing the fallen, commodious mission rooms for religious services and reading room have been established centrally on South Hamilton Street, and the work is in effective and active operation."

—It has been pretty well understood that M. A. Levinson & Co. was to occupy the room adjoining their store, lately vacated by the proprietor in the old VanPelt block. The matter was settled last week, and the work of preparing the room will be commenced at once. The partition will be removed and the entire floor space be thrown into one room. In the spring Mr. VanPelt will give the front of the building an entire rebuild along modern lines, and we know what that means with VanPelt. It will be fully equal in architectural beauty to that of the new postoffice. When these improvements are completed the Levinsons will have one of the most up-to-date stores in Northern Michigan.

—Declaring that the mail order houses, and particularly those in Chicago, are in a fair way to rush the country by destroying the cities and villages, the Michigan Knights of the Grip, in their convention at Lansing last week, declared war on the firms that sell their goods through the medium of Uncle Sam's Postoffice Department. The resolution says: We concur that, if done along legitimate lines, through common sense and good reasoning, consumers should be informed that the value of their farms depends to a certain extent on the interests of the farmer, to a good live town depends for its prosperity on the support of the consumers. Further, the consumer should be educated to the fact that a continual support of mail order houses means the annihilation of the bustling villages and towns which on an average today pay about 90 per cent of all taxes. If they succeed in destroying these towns and villages the consumer must pay this extra tax and charge it, pro rata, to the cost of mail order goods."

The Cold that Hangs on is more dangerous than most people imagine. Besides being disagreeable and making you feel miserable, your system is open to attacks of other more serious diseases such as pneumonia, fevers and other grave illnesses result from neglected colds.

Rexall Cold Tablets

will stop your cold. They cure in grippe, relieve feverish conditions, and cold-headaches. They drive a cold right out of your system and it doesn't come back. We know just what these tablets will do and we recommend them strongly. If they do not break up your cold bring back the empty box and we'll return your money. Per box, 25c.

THE SEA GULLS

Hundreds of the Beautiful Birds Make Charlevoix Both Summer and Winter House.

The sea gull is not a migratory bird. It does not go to Florida when the snow comes, it is with us summer and winter alike. The docks and geese fly to more congenial climes when northern waters are frozen, and even the crows go somewhere, but nobody has ever yet discovered where. But the gull is perennial. He remains where he was hatched, mates, perhaps, with his first cousin, floats about on the lakes in summer and squats on the ice in winter, oblivious to both the summer heat or the winter frost.

The gull colony is just now very much in evidence in Charlevoix. A colony of several hundred has preempted Round Lake as its winter hunting ground, and swarm on the ice about the South Co. docks, where Amos Webster officiates as their friend and provider. A trip over to that side of the harbor is well worth your while about feeding time, when Amos throws out the soft fish and other material from the warehouse. They have become very tame and frequently light on the dock coaxing for a "hand-out." When two big birds grapple a fish there is a rug of war that usually ends up in a lively scrap, while another bird gets the fish—probably some lawyer in the colony.

The gull is not only of beautiful plumage, he is the most useful bird that wears feathers. He is a born scavenger, both in summer and winter, and is inordinately fond of everything that hatches a microbe. He has but one rival, and that is the crow;—but the crow is this skinned and goes to—Port Orange, Florida in winter.

We like the gull, because he "stays put."

Michigan's Future As An Apple State.

At the risk of being dubbed the apple organ of the country, says the Detroit Free Press, the production of this land and fruit is again referred to. Inside of a few days you may have read how Harry Ward cleared only thousands of dollars profit from a single orchard near Grand Traverse, how a Chicago lawyer trying the business as a side issue made a small fortune from one crop, and how another Chicago man says that Michigan is destined to be the apple state of the union.

This conclusion has supporting strength in the two other instances cited. Mr. Ward invested a present idea that the sand lands from which the pines were removed presented no attractions to the farmer or fruit grower. He cross ing the pines, commodious mission rooms for religious services and reading room have been established centrally on South Hamilton Street, and the work is in effective and active operation."

THE CEMENT PLANT

Officials Here to Take Preliminary Observations.

Vice President Hunt, of the Standard Portland Cement Co., arrived in town last Friday, and on Tuesday night President Aldrich, and other officers arrived, and the party is quartered at the Elston.

The purpose of the visit is to look over the ground, arrange and close up certain details connected with the land titles and as far as possible, gather information to aid them in plans of construction, which will be commenced in early spring.

Plans have been considerably changed since reorganization, and some of the changes are somewhat radical. The plant will be built at the quarries, two miles southwest of the harbor entrance and a dock will be built in the outer bay of Lake Michigan, just west of the point. The dock will be built with a wing, which will afford shelter from storms from the west. All lake shipments in and out, will be made over this dock but spurs will be built to the Pere Marquette and Michigan Central, which latter company, we are told, looks upon the enterprise with much favor.

The Charlevoix Standard Portland Cement Co's factory will be making and shipping cement and other stone products in the early fall of 1910.

Wreck on Pere Marquette.

The brakes on the rear section of a heavily loaded Pere Marquette logging train that had been divided to make a steep grade, failed to hold Wednesday afternoon and ten flat cars, loaded with logs, crashed down the incline into a snow plow that was following. The wreck occurred near Grawn, south of Traverse City.

George W. Phelps, 40, of Traverse City, conductor of the snow plow, and Arthur Kennicott, 40, of Williamsburg, Mich., a brakeman, were killed. W. W. Drew, train master of the Petoskey division of the P. M., was badly cut about the head, and his right hand was injured. Arnold Frosher, brakeman was injured about the spine, and is in a serious condition. Edward Keith, section foreman, and Charles Seafe, section hand, were also injured. The dead and injured men were all members of the snow plow crew.

Drew, without a coat, started across the country, through a blinding snow storm for help. He found a telephone about a mile from the scene of the accident and then hurried back to the wreck. When the relief train arrived later they found the trainmaster in his injured condition directing the work of the men in removing the debris.

Winter Navigation.

The St. James tug Margaret McCann came over Sunday afternoon with a consignment of two tons of perch for the Booth Fisheries Co. Never before perch are famous for their size and quality, and this consignment was some fine.

The McCann brought the mail and returned with it Tuesday. She now takes the place of the Beaver, which is laid up. The McCann will make mail trips as long as she can touch at and points on the island, making Charlevoix headquarters.

She will lay up here for extensive repairs to her boiler, and Capt. John McCann will trust to luck getting to the head of the island with another tug.

Masonic.

Last week Charlevoix Lodge No 282, F. & A. M., heard the entire upper story of the Paddock building, which is separated from its lodge room by a space of three feet. On Saturday the carpenters began the work of bridging the space and the work was completed Tuesday.

The purpose of this arrangement is to give the lodge a banquet hall, kitchen and smoking room, and the interior will be changed to meet these requirements.

It is intended that the work shall be completed by January 12th, which date will be an important one in the history of the organization. It will mark the 50th anniversary of the lodge's charter, and interest will be added to the event by the presence of Grand Lecturer Gilbert, who will hold a school of instruction for this and neighboring lodges. It is also hoped that the presence of the Grand Master may be secured.

Leahy, the Optician Coming.

Leahy will be at Baker's Inn Friday, Jan. 14, and will remain until Sunday evening. Have your eyes examined and your glasses corrected.

IN EFFECT JAN. 1.

New Law in Regard to Liquor Shipments C. O. D.

Uncle Sam puts into force on January 1, 1910, a new criminal code which will aid in the keeping of New Year's resolutions, at least in the prohibition states. The measure was passed by congress during a stolen moment from the tariff considerations of the extra session and legislators who have not before had time to read it are likely to have their attention called to its provisions in a demand for an "explanation." It will curtail the practice of shipping liquor "C. O. D." into prohibition states and cuts off that last source of supply which has been regarded as invincible.

"No railroad company or carrier," says the code, "shall ship liquor into a prohibition state to other than the bona fide consignee." Violation of this section is punished by a fine of $5,000 and two years imprisonment or both.

Not content with this restriction of the supply, the makers of the code have set down that every package which does not bear the name of the person to whom it is shipped, the kind of liquor which it contains, and the quantity on the outside may be seized and condemned.

Here is the clause which has made the thirsty in the prohibition states wonder if the code committee could have been "packed" against them. It says that it shall be forbidden to collect the purchase price of liquor shipped as interstate commerce "before, on, or after delivery."

If this latter provision has not killed the C. O. D. package the framers of the code would like to have another opportunity further to amend it. In the south where the prohibition wave has submerged several states bordering on others less afflicted in this regard, the express business has been enormous. In some cities it is represented that quantities of packages of liquor would be shipped to the agent so that the man who wanted a quart for Saturday night could not even exercise the forethought which controlled a Saturday night thirst on Wednesday.

With almost the convenience of the wholesale liquor depot he could upon payment warning of the craving run over to the express office ask for a package for "John Doe," pay the C. O. D. charges and snap his fingers at the law.

LOCAL OPTION AND TAXES

We Are Paying Up Debts That the Saloons Helped to Create.

City Treasurer W. W. Bailey informs the Hesperia City Journal that the strongest objections to the high taxes this year come from the saloons, the amounts run from $110 to $330. He also says that but a few lay the increase to local option for, as a rule, the most of the taxpayers are intelligent enough to know the real reason of the raise. For the benefit of those few who, for one reason or another, desire to blame the raise of the saloon license money for their high taxes, he made a few figures. For instance he showed that the 33 saloons which Charlevoix county formerly had paid into the county treasury the sum of $6,260, which the county had for use, less the treasurer's collection fee of $412.50, or a net amount of $7,847.50. The assessment of the county for local purposes is $1,930,932. Therefore the man who is assessed $110 on his home must pay 12½ cents to offset his share of the loss of the license money. The one whose house is assessed at $330 must put up 37½ cents as his share. The man whose property is assessed at a thousand dollars pays a dollar and a quarter and all others in that same proportion.

Now, of course, says the Journal, everybody knows that really our taxes are not a cent higher than they would have been if the 33 saloons were still doing business. The reason our county tax was doubled up this year is because the board of supervisors voted to raise $32,000 extra to pay up the indebtedness which accumulated under the license system. That will be paid this year and the burden will be off our shoulders. There will not be the big grist of criminal expense, caused by the direct influence of the saloons, to be paid out of next years taxes and altogether the future looks bright. However, we have had the saloons and the debt was piled up and now

GALE AND TIDAL WAVE RAVAGE NEW ENGLAND

Harvest of Death Reaped by Blizzard That Strikes Eastern States.

SNOW COVERS THE NORTHWEST

Worst December Storm in Decade Sweeps Wide Area and Cost Is High.

Driven in a terrific northeast gale, blowing more than sixty miles an hour, a tidal wave swept the coast of New England Sunday morning, tossed over the seventeen-foot seawall at Chelsea, engulfed 250 homes, took a toll of three lives, took a 20 house area and left the shore to the north and south of Boston strewn with the wreckage of summer cottages.

Water reached in the second stories of many houses, and it is feared that the loss of lives was not greater was due to a large gail to Hallowell Jones of Boston, who saw the tidal wave come over the dike and sounded a warning which enabled people scurrying to the upper floors of their homes. One man fell dead from excitement and two children were found unconscious in two feet of water and were rescued from drowning and were resuscitated.

The tidal wave swept over Atlantic avenue in Boston, along which the coast steamers and theberries dock and filled the cellars of warehouses, causing damage estimated at $1,000,000. For several hours the town of Hull was an island and lifesavers rescued people from their second story windows by means of a breeches buoy. At Hingham, Mass., scores of cottages were wrecked from their foundations and carried over the Weekapaug of houses is strewn along the beaches at Point's Neck, Old Orchard, Ferry Beach, Camp Ellis and Biddeford Pool.

The Northeast woke up Christmas morning to find that the weather man had presented them with the worst December snowstorm in more than a decade. From the northern limits of the country in the northeastern tier of counties in Illinois a smooth, heavy blanket lay over the whole country, hiding out of sight the hard face of hills, filling up valleys and ravines, and in the broad open spaces where the wind had full play wrinkling up into fantastic drifts that buried fences, blocked roadways and completely obliterated miles of railroad tracks.

Whipped by a gale that at times reached a velocity of forty-eight miles an hour, the snowstorm swept eastward from the Mississippi Valley during the day. It was a wide path, reaching as far south as Tennessee and North Carolina and extending north into upper New York State. In New York City it almost stalled street car traffic, crippled the elevated service, put the traveling Christmas gift and one most welcome to the day Chicago found itself with the romantic features left out of consideration, as inconvenient and expensive.

Before another twelve hours had passed thousands of dollars had been spent in tearing rents through the blanket to make way for the trains that carry the country's traffic, and all night linemen were at work repairing the telegraph wires that the snow had broken down in its descent.

ZELAYA FLEES HIS COUNTRY

United States Allows Him to Escape Upon Some Conditions.

It was learned the other day that former President Jose Zelaya of Nicaragua has left the country of his birth and came aboard Guerrero for Salina Cruz, Mexico. Zelaya's departure was very secret. Only a few of his most loyal friends knew that the former dictator of the country was about to board the Mexican gunboat. The ship left without being molested by the United States cruiser. The United States has compromised with its original attitude toward former President Zelaya of Nicaragua. The news was general the other day in the departments in Washington that this government had purposely interposed no objection to the flight of Zelaya from the anger of his own people, and that this compromise was based on the assurance from Mexico and Nicaragua that Zelaya would go into perpetual exile.

BIG DEFICIT IN POSTOFFICE

Hitchcock on Losses in Second-Class Mails and Rural Routes.

Confronted with a deficit of $17,479,778, the present administration of the postoffice department began its operations. This was the largest deficit in the history of the postoffice, but it was long as the deficit in the department, amounting only to two millions of dollars annually little attention was paid to it, but when, in the last few years, it mounted to upwards of $10,000,000, and finally, in 1909, exceeded $17,000,000, "ordinary business prudence suggested that the causes be definitely located." These are statements in the annual report of Postmaster General Frank H. Hitchcock, made public the other day.

"GUARANTEE" BANK IS PROMPT

Kiefer, Okla., Institution's Losses Made Good in a Week.

At Muskogee, Okla., State Bank Commissioner Young said he had just paid in full the depositors of the Kiefer Bank of Kiefer. The Kiefer "Guarantee" Bank closed its doors a week before as a result of the failure of the Farmers' National Bank of Tulsa. Forty-four thousand dollars was drawn from the State guaranty fund to make good the Kiefer bank's losses.

SENATOR M'LAURIN IS DEAD.

End Comes to Mississippi Leader at Brandon Residence.

United States Senator Anselm J. McLaurin, who had been a leader in Mississippi Democracy for many years, died at his residence in Brandon Mississippi, Wednesday night. Death was due to an attack of heart failure, and came without the slightest warning. When the fatal stroke came upon him Senator McLaurin was seated in a rocking chair in front of the fireplace in his home. He suddenly fell forward without speaking a word, and life was extinct when members of his family reached his side.

Senator McLaurin, who was 61 years old, began his first term in the United States Senate in 1894, but was elected Governor of Mississippi in 1895 and served in that office four years. He was elected again to the Senate in 1900 and served one term. He was returned for the term which began on March 4, 1907. His present term of office would have expired on March 2, 1913. Senator McLaurin began the study of law in 1868, after he had served through the civil war as a private in the Confederate army. He was born near Brandon and raised on a farm. Seven children survive him.

In the Senate chamber he was known as one of the strongest defenders of the South. He believed in the South. Its resources, and future. He did some active work on the Senate committee on the Mississippi river and tributaries and was a member of other important Senate committees, among them those on civil service, commerce, immigration, interstate commerce, public expenditures, and the joint committee on revision of the laws of the United States.

The Swedish government is about to undertake an investigation of the causes of the high emigration from that country to America, with a view to applying a remedy, which will prevent the depletion of the country of its very best blood.

ALBERT TAKES OATH AS KING OF BELGIUM

Hundreds of Thousands Visit State Entry of Successor to Leopold II. into Capital.

FAVORS HUMANITY IN KONGO

New Ruler's Speech from Throne Gives Pledge for Mission of Civilization in Africa.

Albert I., King of the Belgians, with his queen, Elizabeth, made a state entry into the capital from Laeken Thursday. Cannons boomed forth a royal salute, church bells rang out and hundreds of thousands of people lined the route of the regal march carrying "Long live Albert!" and "Long live Elizabeth!"

When the procession arrived at the chamber, where the oath of accession was to be taken, the successor to Leopold II. was given a notable reception by the assembled senators and deputies. A feeble attempt of the Socialists to make a republican demonstration failed miserably. At every discordant note a fresh outburst of patriotic cheering drowned the malcontents.

King Albert's speech from the throne was an eloquent tribute to Leopold I. and to his uncle, Leopold II. He declared that the latter had performed a prodigious work in Africa, with the consciousness of enriching the nation and increasing the economic resources of Belgium. Turning to the subject of Belgium's future, King Albert said: "We must continue our unbreakable attachment to constitutional liberty and the love of independence, and thus hold sacred our patrimony which we owe to toward the peaceful conquests in the field of labor and science. In the Kongo the nation wishes a policy of humanity and progress enforced. The interests of natives must always be the chief care, and when she engages to apply in the Kongo a policy worthy of her, she has a right to count her work."

MONSTER WARSHIP LAUNCHED.

Utah, Greatest of Battle Craft, Leaves Way Into the Delaware.

Declared without an equal afloat, the Utah, the greatest battle ship built in the United States, was launched from the yard of the New York Shipbuilding Company at Camden, N. J. In the presence of several thousand persons, who crowded the piers and every other vantage point. As the hull started to leave the ways, Miss Mary Allen Supy, of Salt Lake City, daughter of the Governor of Utah, broke a bottle of champagne against the bow of the ship. Launchings of warships on the Delaware have become a common occurrence, the latest addition to the American navy created the enthusiasm of the crowd, whose cheers, as well as the din made by the whistles of river craft, continued several minutes.

He knew he was close to death, and said farewell to the immediate members of his family and a few close friends. He died as he had lived, in the city of his birth.

CZAR MENACED BY BOMB PLOT.

Six Conspirators Arrested—Explosives Found in Basement.

The Russian secret service police have unearthed a plot against the Czar and Czarina. There were arrested in Moscow the other day two women and six men on a charge of being an anarchistic group. It is expected these arrests may cause some light on the killing by a bomb a few days ago in St. Petersburg of Col. Karpoff, the chief of the secret police of that city.

The arrest of the men and women took place in a house on Yauskoive street, where they had been living for a fortnight, in the house, hidden in the cellar, were found several bombs filled with a high explosive. The secret police have been watching this house ever since Col. Karpoff was killed.

The information the police received was that the conspirts were making the bombs to use upon the arrival in Moscow of the Czar and Czarina. The police say the bombs were to be dispatched to the Kursk depot and exploded there when the imperial couple and their suite arrived on the Ltsdia railway. A watchman implicated in the conspiracy disappeared immediately after the arrests were made. The arrests and the finding of the bombs created a sensation in the city and resulted in a more rigid supervision over all persons arriving in Moscow. CHICAGO.

Dun's Weekly Review of Chicago Trade says: The season of "good will" is not the reflection of business prosperity which afford much encouragement for the future. Heavy payments through the banks testify to larger use of money and Christmas trade in the leading lines of brand and at interior points is seen to compare favorably with all previous seasons. Heavy-weight apparel, necessaries and luxuries have been under remarkable demand and seasonable stocks generally have undergone ample reduction. The purchasing power of the people during the past few weeks has been shown to an extent fully equalling expectations. High prices occasioned some adverse comment, but failed to check the enthusiasm of buyers, and it has been demonstrated clearly that consumption maintains a pace close to the production of the requirements.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 24, against 28 last week, 22 in 1908 and 22 in 1907. The total for the month to date number 11, against 10 last week, 6 last year and 7 in 1907.

Men's Wife After 32 Years—Both Remarried and Have Families.

Each having been informed and believing that the other was dead and having married, A. E. Steel of Hiram township, Saginaw county, and his wife, who left him 32 years ago, have just met, for the first time since their separation, although they have been living within twenty miles of each other for the last twenty-five years. She is living happily with her second husband in Owosso and he with his second wife on a farm in Brant township, and each have several children. Mr and Mrs Mead formerly lived at Ovid, where he was employed in a mill. Misunderstanding arose one night Mrs Mead left house, taking their baby daughter, Anna, with her. Mead made efforts to locate his wife, but failed, and finally drifted to California and from there to Oklahoma, later coming back to Michigan and settling in Brant township. Meantime he had been told that his wife and child were dead and he remarried. For some time he has been working in the Owosso sugar factory. Recently Otto Kuenz came to the factory to repair the boilers. The latter told Mead of his domestic troubles and incidentally mentioned that his former wife was Mead when he married her. This led to a meeting of Mead and his daughter and later with his lost wife, who is now Mrs. Charles Herman. In the meantime Herman decided to leave conditions as they are.

CONGRESS AND ITS BURDEN.

A high sense of responsibility has never characterized the American Congress. Shoulders have never been bowed by the realization of the burden of tasks to be performed. The gray heads upon which the responsibility lie do not look down are gray, not by reason of wisdom or statesmanship, of anxious hours for the public interest, of distress lest the people fail to secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and their posterity.

Mr. Taft, while upon his recent tour said he feared that the period of his administration would be too short in which the pledges of the Chicago platform could be carried out. Speech after speech detailed new economy problems, considered legislation made necessary by rapidly altering conditions of life and thought, reviewed the work inherited from his predecessor and the imperative obligation of carrying to completion. There is no question as to the work on hand. House and Senate leaders have declared in a vague way the subjects which must be taken up. Commissions of investigation are to be appointed. A bill must be made between the forces which desire the conservation of the sugar trust in the courts and those who crave for a congressional inquiry. The tariff problem is one of the most important pieces of legislation to be considered. The Payne act was a revision of that of 1908, he will call the attention of Congress to this fact and area section thereon, he will not do this to the lessons the divergence from the platform pledge is marked. He urges the creation of a postal savings bank and the granting of government aid to the merchant marine, in the interest of the establishment of regular lines of vessels between our ports and distant ports of the world.

On the question of injunctions Mr. Taft makes a recommendation which will attract attention. After quoting the plank on that subject in the platform he says he urges the enactment of a law forbidding hereafter the issuing of any injunction, temporary or permanent, by any federal court, "without previous notice and an opportunity to be heard on behalf of the parties to be enjoined, unless it shall appear that a delay in the action of the court, and the delay necessary to give notice would be irreparable injury to the complainant," and he wants the law to provide "that upon the issue of the court minutes, with the reasons for his act. The judge of the federal courts, in such cases as the President has in mind, has been to refuse to issue an injunction where he believes he believed that irreparable injury might be examined by the proper authorities. The President's recommendation here is in line with the platform, and is a good one. Perhaps the time has arrived that the platform referance to the effect of the President's suggestion would be merely to put the present procedure in statutes. It should be remembered that nobody complains of the practice of issuing ex parte orders without a hearing, except those who want to violate some law, to letter or spirit. The law is clear, and the hearing comes soon after the granting of the injunction. Mr. Taft's suggestions on the subject are worthy of serious consideration.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

PROFESSOR T. C. ATKESON.

Received Overseer National Grange at Recent Meeting.

Thomas Clark Atkeson, master of the West Virginia state grange, was born at Lawrence farm, near Buffalo, Putnam county, W. Va., Feb. 15, 1852. He was educated at Buffalo academy, University of West Virginia, Kentucky Agricultural and Mechanical college and Kentucky university, graduating from the last named institution with the degree of LL. B. in 1874. He has since received the honorary degrees of A. M., M. S. and Ph. D. from different institutions. In 1873 he founded the West Virginia Agriculturist and has ever since been a frequent contributor to many of the best class of agricultural publications. July 8, 1875, he married Miss Cordelia Meek, eldest daughter of Rev. Zephaniah Meek, D. D., editor of the Central Methodist, Cuthbertsburg, Ky., immediately following which he began farming on his homestead, which he afterward bought and still owns and operates.

He joined the grange in May, 1882. At the session of the state grange held in Sistersville of the same year he was elected assistant steward. In 1883 he was elected secretary, in 1884 lecturer in 1885 overseer, which office he held continuously until elected master in January, 1887, to which he has been re-elected under usage. At Rochester, N. Y., in November, 1903, he was elected overseer of the national grange, next to the highest office in that body, and has been re-elected ever since. As a member of the state grange legislative committee he prepared the law creating the state board of agriculture, on which he served for four years by appointment of Governor Fleming. McDuffie and Atkinson six of which he was president of the board. In 1897 he was elected a member of the national grange legislative committee. In 1901 he was elected professor of agriculture at the University of West Virginia, serving two years. In 1906 he was elected president of Barboursville college, Barbour Harvey colleges, which he resigned in June of 1907 to accept the position of dean of the colleges of Agriculture of the University of West Virginia. He has been a member of the university board of regents and of the state survey commission. For the year he was president of the Buffalo district board of education, having taken a deep interest in agricultural and educational affairs.

The grange was established in West Virginia in 1872. It has been formed in every movement, says Professor Atkeson, for promoting the agricultural welfare. In a large measure it brought about the organization of the College of Agriculture as one of the colleges of the university, and it has ever been the state organization that have for their object the promotion of same, and the U. S. Department of Agriculture owes much to the grange and its support.

The forty-third annual session of the national grange, held at Des Moines, Ia., last month, measured up well in point of accomplishments with previous meetings of the kind. The resolutions that were adopted were for the most part conceived in the highest interests of the order and those which relate to our great national policies, such as the tariff, taxation, transportation and our import agricultural interests, will find general approval by the entire and extraordinary grange.

There was a more general discussion of the question when presented this usual. Fewer it seemed to us, were referred to committees. More time was devoted to discussion and action. The discussion on taxation, involving the two prominent issues, "classification" and "uniform rate," occupied nearly all of an afternoon session and came up on a resolution sent up from the Kentucky state grange and not following the report of the committee on taxation, as might have been anticipated. While it is no doubt wise to refer many subjects presented in resolutions to committees appointed for their consideration, who may give considerable time and thought to the matter, the grange position in regard to them, we all know that in a state grange as well as national these committee reports come in at the close of the session, and in the usual rush to get through and get away adequate discussion is rarely given to a committee's report. We believe in discussing many subjects that are presented for the consideration of delegates at our state and national grange meetings when they are presented in the form of resolutions, even though they are afterward referred to committees.

The matter of proportional representation that was expected to divide the state masters more equally than it did proved to be decidedly one sided when the vote was taken. The Michigan plan of giving two additional votes for each 1,000 of membership above the first 10,000 was again presented, also another, known as the federal plan, the essence of which is that each state shall be entitled to representation by one voting member for every 10,000 members in the state and every fraction over 5,000 in the state and every voting member shall be entitled to an alternate in case of his own absence; that what is known as the representative vote shall be used on all ordinary occasions, the state vote only when demanded, and when it is demanded both representative and state vote must be cast before a measure can be declared carried. This combined vote is to be used at the election of officers and on changes in the constitution. Should a state be represented by only one person that state shall be entitled to one other representative to be elected by the state grange or appointed by the state grange executive committee. Neither plan was adopted. We may add it is doubtful if either ever will be. There were many resolutions of large public interest adopted, and the reports of the committees were exceedingly able and instructive. Postal savings banks and the parcels post system were demanded, ship subsidies strongly opposed, in road improvement the market roads should receive first attention; on the question of taxation the uniform rate system found approval, on property to be exempt; a committee on conservation, initiated by request, was appointed; protection for monopolies or for those who sell in foreign markets for less than is demanded in our own was opposed; indorsement of ex-President Roosevelt's conservation policy was voted; liberal appropriations by congress for the support of agricultural extension departments in agricultural colleges were asked; $5,000 a year for two years was voted for the partial support of the national grange organ. This continuing lobby only a part of the measures approved by the national grange.

The finances of the national grange are in good shape. The final assessments of the year, which amounted to $15,362.20 on Oct. 1, and since that date this amount has been increased about $1,000, by those from state granges that did not report previous to Oct. 1. The national master reports that no funds of the national grange have been lost through investment or otherwise and that the trustees' books had been audited every year by the executive committee and the list of securities found intact. These funds are invested in loan upon real estate to the amount of $50,000, supply secured; also $45,000.71 is invested in semi-annual and annual bonds of municipalities and states, $5,000 is pooled in savings banks and the balance in smaller amounts in safe companies. In view of the fact that the management of the financial investments of the national grange has been questioned and criticised, an investigating committee was appointed which, after a careful examination of the condition and security of the funds of the order, reported that it found all investments to have been wisely made and commended the trust to the men who secured the investments.

Perfect Coating for Hams.

"Mrsulin" is the name of a substance that is sold in Dobbsville for coating hams. It is as pliable as rubber, tasteless and harmless, and keeps the hams clean, and who takes his share of the world and his other people have theirs.—New York Sun.

Cease Mourning Over the Past.

ALTERATION SALE!

Our present quarters being entirely too small for our growing business, we have made arrangements whereby we will occupy the old post office in addition to the place we now occupy. The entire front and inside of the building will be remodeled so that when finished it will be a modern up-to-date double store. Before the work of remodeling commences we must reduce our stock in order to make room for the workmen. We have decided to give the people of Charlevoix and vicinity the greatest opportunity ever offered to purchase goods at a price regardless of cost and profit to us. This sale will start

M. A. LEVINSON & CO.

Charlevoix, Michigan.

A Gentleman.

A man that's clean inside and out; who neither looks up to the rich nor down on the poor; who can lose without squealing and win can win without kvaging; who is considerate of women, children and old people; who is too brave to lie, too generous to cheat, and who takes his share of the world and lets other people have theirs.—New York Sun.

Vegetable Suspension Bridge.

A remarkable suspension bridge spans the River Apurimac in central Peru. The ropes of this bridge are composed of plants ropes and vines, while the planks are made of branches. In the humid climate of Peru it would be by no means extraordinary if this vegetable bridge were one day to start growing.—Wide World Magazine.

Ominous.

One of the first signs that a woman is getting old is when she tells the story that she married before she was 16.

Mankind's Great Deed.

From location comes this well from a long-suffering man: "God made the hoes, man made the collar and the devil invented the mules." This combination boasts of many things accomplished by its predecessors on the earth, but no genius has yet arrived to give suffering man a soft neck bandage, which is much more needed than sore places and other curiosities.

Latent Ability.

"Yes, sir," mused Brown, "poor old Jones died a really tragic death. I never would have thought it of him—didn't know he had it in him!"

Nothing More Than Her Right.

A Cincinnati man asked for a divorce because his wife ironed his high tempered, and used exasperating language; but the judge held that a woman who had had the care of four small children and no domestic help, had a right to have a temper and to also use language that expressed her feelings.

Too Much Curiosity.

"My curiosity is getting the better of me," passed the side-show proprietor as the three-legged man kicked his one in the solar plexus.

The Moon's Troubles.

The sun attracts both the earth and the moon, and, as they are always either different distances from the sun or in different directions from the sun, they will be differently attracted by the sun; and hence their relative motion will be disturbed. Thus rise the perturbations of the moon's apparent motions.

Where it Fails.

Education is one of the best things in the world, but bows its effectiveness when it comes into contact with prejudice.

Mortgage Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of a mortgage made and executed by John W. Wells and Hannah Wells to Rosamond Marsh, dated the twenty-fourth day of March, 1906, mortgage and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Charlevoix County, Michigan, in Liber 57 of mortgages, page 500 and four, in Liber 57 of mortgages page 501 and five, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date hereof, the sum of Twenty-Five Hundred Dollars, principal and interest, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, and the sum of Ninety dollars and ninety cents (90 cents) attorney fee provided for in said mortgage has become operative. Now, therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, I will on Tuesday, the 8th day of February, at public auction to the highest bidder, at the south door of the court house in the City of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix, Michigan, on the third day of March, A. D. 1910, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, sell said premises or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay said mortgage, with interest and costs, and the attorney fee aforesaid, and all legal costs, and the premises in said mortgage mentioned are described as follows: All that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the Township of Charlevoix, County, State of Michigan, viz: Lot 3 of Sec. 31 T. 34 N. R. 7 W. The above is subject to a prior mortgage to Ann Arbor Savings Bank, dated March 24, 1906, and recorded in said Charlevoix County in Liber 57 of mortgages, page 499.

Dated this 9th day of December, A. D. 1909.

AN INSPIRING TRIBUTE.

Touching Scene, That Occurred In the House of Representatives.

From a volume by Hon. A. E. Stevenson, "Speaking of Men I Have Known," is taken this account of an incident which deserves a place in memory:

A touching scene occurred in the house of representatives a number of years ago when an aged member from New Jersey rose and for the first time addressed the speaker. All eyes were turned in his direction as he slowly and painfully ascended the aisle to the speaker's desk. His venerable appearance and kindly expression, coupled with most courteous manners, at once commended attention. As in lonely tones he again said "Mr. Speaker!" there came from the farthest end of the great hall in a whisper, but distinctly heard by all, the words, "Sweet Alice, Ben Bolt!" A moment later and from the floor and gallery many voices responded in the familiar refrain, "Don't you remember sweet Alice, Ben Bolt?"

The ovation which immediately followed was such as is rarely witnessed in the great hall. Business was suspended for the moment and the friend of the new member warmly greeted by the chosen representatives of all parties and sections. It was an inspiring tribute, one worthily bestowed. The member was Hon. Benjamin Bonneville, author of the little poem, sung in every home throughout the land, and on the way into all languages and touched all hearts.

The Man Behind the Gun.

The late Admiral Sims once laid the good fortune of the navy to originate a short speling phrase, "the man behind the gun." He used it in a speech on the defense of America in which he forbore to emphasize the necessity of having efficient gunpowder, concentrating the entire personnel. It was also a reminder that the enlisted men have a good deal to do with the bringing about victory than always appears in history of official reports. The expression was employed in supplementing the views of Captain Mahan and Admiral Sims, who are as epitomizing a science theory of instruction.—Boston Transcript.

CHAPTER XXIV.

At last—the springtime came!

The potent energy of the sun opened all the myriad veins of the great trees, wakened the lethargising creatures of the dens and burrows from their prolonged sleep, quickened the earth's sap and forest in the bosom of earth, and sent the blood coursing through mankind's veins, quickening all his intellectual and spiritual powers.

And then, the end of his exile was near. In a few months he would have vindicated the purity of his purpose to attitude the divine life and have proved himself worthy to claim the hand of Priscilla!

All the winter long he had piled his axe, there among, now that the snow had thawed, he set to work to delve which he had strown around him, and saw with an indescribable feeling of triumph as it delight the open soil made fresh for the seed. Then he set about a patient eye in it and and the sharp, cut deep into the black soil. Then he had the earth smoothed as sweet as rose when the blood and the tender shoots were slowly advancing wave. Never had that yeomanly pair of hearing the rattle of the axe, or the grating of the plow against stones on the great farm, they had to there work, strained in their yokes and dragged the plow against stones and clinging roots of earth, been built so genuine and deep. It was good to be alive to stop, to see, to hear! Life had lost their charm. David's sin was no longer a withering and blasting, but a chastening and refreshing memory. His coming was a kingdom, his palm a palace and he was now a happy man. Yet he expected his seeking for the last day of his self-imposed exclusion, which ended with the month of May.

On the day, the last day, his prayer seemed to him, he would go to the house of God and obtain the Holy Spirit. He would devote to that sacred function the sacred hour of the week of life's chief support into the open forces!

On a winter's evening of devotion and now come upon him as he prepared himself for his task! Long years there is not a single act in the whole economy of life better calculated to add a thousand mind to its profoundest depths than the seeing of these solemn scenes which have within them the promise and potency of life. Year after year, century after century, millions of men have gone down to the tight of the all-beholding and life-giving sun to cast into the earth the seeds of the sustenance of their children! It is a sublime act of faith, and that sacrifice of a present for a future good, an act so full of the spirit of Christ, so inspired and holy, because familiar and old. The Divine Master himself performed it with a sacred enthusiasm.

And may the field itself inspired solemn reflections and noble pride in the mind of the sower. It was the field he had cared and tended for a wilderness! Here was still which had never been spoiled in the daylight. Here was ground which perhaps for a thousand years and nobody for ten thousand years, should send forth seed to the sower; and he had cultivated it with his own hands! Generations and centuries after he should have died and been forgotten, men would go forth into this field as he was forty to day, to sow their seed and reap their harvests.

The sound of footsteps over his shoulder and stepped forth from his cabin in the dawn of the day. Dragging he had made was an almost perfect circle. All around it was the green wallow of the force, with the green of the grass, and the beauty, the size and symmetrical, standing like vast Christian column supporting a gothic frame upon which rested the lofty roof of the sky, the canopy of the sky, the arch of the morning, the curtain of the evening, the tent of the sunbeams of birds. Odors of pine, of hemlock, of cedar, of spring, of fresh-plowed earth, of burning life, well-nigh overwhelmed him. Joy was the trumpet to transport, and fluted like music to the ear of his soul.

The priest, should he offer his sacrifice, the sacrifice of a broken heart, a humble spirit, about to be cast upon his faith; in the beautiful and symbolic heart of nature, the sacrifice for the future, stepped forth into the open forest.

His open countenance, jeopared with the sun, was flushed with love and adoration; his lips quiled; his eyes grew his lifted them to the heavens to his adoration prayer for the benediction of the great Deliverer, he drew into his nostrils the sweet odors, into his lungs the pure air, into his soul the beauty and glory of the world, and then, with his hand with the golden grain, he flung it into the bosom of the waiting earth.

All day long he strode across the clearing and with a thoughtful eye and a thoughtful mind, he sowed the seed. Pulling her agreement to come and bring him home on the eve of their wedding day, Pepeeta engaged him a beautiful Aquarium from an opening in the green wall of the great cathedral. She saw David sending immovable in his furrow. For a few moments she was absorbed in admiration of the grace and beauty of the noble and commanding figure, and then she was dulled with the consciousness that she possessed the priceless treasure of his love, but these emotions were followed by a holy awe as she discovered that the soul of her lover was filled with religious ecstasy. She felt that the place was sacred where she was holy ground, and reverently awaited the emergence of the worshiper from the holy of holies into which he had withdrawn for prayer.

But the rapture lasted long and it was growing late. The shadows from the mountains of the east had already crept across the clearing and were approaching the cabin of the priest. The sun in the eastern side. It was time for them to go. She took a step toward him, and then another, moving slowly, reverently, and touched him on the arm. He started. The half-closed eyes opened and fell on the girl. The ground, the dreamer woke and descended from the heaven of the spirit-world into that of the earthly, the form of a pure and noble woman.

"I have come," she said, simply.

He took her hand in his and kissed her.

"There is one through yet!"

"So it seems! I must have lost myself!"

"I think they rather found thyself."

"Perhaps I did; but I must return to labor. It will never be for me to let my vision subpoint my tasks. They will be hurtful, save as incentives to toil. I must be careful."

"Let me help thee. There are only a few more furrows. I am sure that I am a sower." She said, extending her hand.

He placed some of the seed in her apron and she trudged by his side, leaning at her awkwardness but laughing with her might. Her lover took her hand in his and showed her how to cast the seed, and so they labored together until every furrow was filled. It was dark when they were done. They lingered a little while to put the cabin in order, and then crossed their faces towards the old farmhouse. It was dark when they reached the little bridge, "that was built one night years ago by David to love."

"And met again after our tragedy and our suffering to find that love is eternal." Thought David.

"Thy sweet face is a fine memory in balance, recalling that bitter past, and the man of many sins and sorrows said, 'Give me thy hand, Pepeeta.'"

"And met again after our tragedy and our suffering to find that love is eternal." David added.

"Thy sweet face is a fine memory in balance, recalling that bitter past, and the man of many sins and sorrows said, 'Give me thy hand, Pepeeta.'"

COST OF THE PANAMA CANAL.

A revised statement of Panama canal expenditures the total amount expended on purchase and construction (Oct. 25, 1909, as $231,231,971.14 This is practically one-half of the present authorized bond issue. Authority has been given for bond issues amounting to $375,200,000. The actual issue to date has been bonds to the amount $84,631,000. From the sale of these bonds $7,200,000.83 has been realized. Deducting the proceeds of bond sales from the total expenditure, there remains $23,531,171.31, which has been paid out of the general fund of the treasury and is reimbursable from further bond sales if such a course is deemed necessary or desirable.

Authority rests with the treasury to issue bonds in the amount of $93,921,471.01 for reimbursement of money already paid from the general fund, plus further issues to the amount of $140,647,528.99 for the contract and completion of the work. This makes a total of $234,568,000 for bonds authorized but not yet issued.

Disbursements on constructive account have been as follows:

During fiscal year 1905....	$ 2,918,510.53
During fiscal year 1906....	6,000,000.00
During fiscal year 1907....	27,194,612.71
During fiscal year 1908....	33,333,333.34
During fiscal year 1909....	31,419,142.41
During first four months of fiscal year 1910....	11,646,462.14

The more costly work of constructing dams and locks is yet to come. When that is under way the monthly drafts will probably show a considerable increase over the figures above. Both are Christmas texts, if we be able to see it. "It is the Lord"; "Ye are my witnesses."

The first note of Christmas is a note of joy as illustrated in the coming of angels, shepherds with flocks, a star leading wise men. All this story is sweet, we follow with them, we find Him and worship.

We look back once again in another style. The beautiful German myth of the "Christ Child" who, in spite of his divine nature, is a child from infancy to manhood, and large share in the joy and wonder and hope of Mary, may bring to birth the Christ.

There is something worth redeeming in this story. We should not merely see on the sphere of life's cloud lands spelled "Christ" in the light side of the ship." Keep at it! be brave be steady at your work, whether it be teaching or housekeeping. Let it not be a hard task, but a willing one, the homage of a life, that is a trust from God.

We should be glad if there had been no Christmas in the world. On the above it is the story of Christ, in labor and doubt and monotony, we minister to no stranger, no tyrant. Every "Christ" is "the lord," glory and peace, love and good will.

8 DIE, 400 RESCUED IN AN ILLINOIS MINE

Explosion Is Followed by Death-Dealing Gases in Pit Near Herrin.

OPEN LAMPS CAUSE DISASTER

Prompt and Gallant Rescue Measures Are Put Forth by Management and Others.

Eight men were killed and the lives of 400 others were imperiled by an explosion of gas in mine "A" of the Chicago and Carterville Coal Company, near Herrin, Ill. Open lamps carried by the mine's engineer and his assistant caused the disaster. There were three men and a boy in this place at the time of the explosion. Prompt action by the management of the mine resulted in the safe exit of the hundreds of men who were at work below ground. Within five minutes after the first report of the explosion the miners in the humidity identity of the accident were carried to the surface and on the return trips of the cages rescuers were lowered to entities Nos. 7 and 8 mines, where the catastrophe took place.

The dead are: Eugene Harrett, assistant engineer; Salvatore Greeno, Tom Lawber, Simeon W. Fraser, mine engineer; Pietro Romeo, driver; George Sarfer, miner; Thomas Williams, miner; Thomas Williams, killed boy, about 16 years old.

Thomas Williams, superintendent of the mine, and Robert Hueston, manager, headed the first relay of rescuers. Despite the heavy damp which flowed into the chambers adjoining those in which fires were burning and choking gas, these men plunged into the workings. Three bodies blocked their path. Early examination showed that the men were alive, and they were rushed to the surface. One of them was A. J. Hueston, a brother of the manager. The others were Charles Kies and Albert Shelton. All were revived and are expected to recover from the effects of the gas.

The rescuers next found the bodies of Snyder, Greeno and Romeo. None of these men had been burned, the condition of the bodies justifying mainly to the force of the concussion. Harler's body was badly burned, the features being scorched almost beyond recognition. The valiant efforts of the rescuers to penetrate more deeply into the workings were repulsed by increasing banks of after damp. The ventilating operations of the mine had not been damaged, but it could not come into with the gases and suffocating damp. Hundreds of men were forced to retreat, leaving the bodies of their fellow workmen behind.

Fire also began to gain headway. Later all efforts were directed towards fighting the flames. Conditions are such that it is hoped they will be extinguished before the workmen reach the explosion.

The mine is under the active management of J. B. Peters, of Carbondale, who is vice president of the Chicago and Carterville Coal Company. The president of the concern is James Peters, of Chicago, former sheriff of Cook County.

WARRINER GETS 6-YEAR TERM.

Big Four Embezzler Guilty and Asks Quick Sentence.

With a hysterical plea that sentence be immediately pronounced, Charles F. Warriner, the defaulting local treasurer of the Big Four Railroad, pleaded guilty to embezzlement of $100,000 and was sentenced to six years in the state prison at Michigan City. The plea or guilty was made by prearrangement between the county prosecutor and counsel for the man who is alleged to have stolen at least $100,000 of the road's money. Immediately after the sentence was pronounced Jeanette Stewart-Ford, the woman in the Warriner case, will be brought to the county jail on charge of blackmail, and the principal witness against her will be Warriner, who he is alleged to have driven from crime to crime for ten years. When Warriner's lawyers entered a plea of guilty their client made a wild, passionate declaration of his agonies he had suffered during the years that he had been engaged in systematic thefts. He concluded with an appeal for an immediate sentence.

Big Whisky Warehouse Burns.

A fire which for several hours threatened the destruction of all its life block in the heart of the city's business center destroyed the Kentucky warehouse of Sol and Sig Frieberg, Fourth street and Central avenue, Cincinnati, and the loss of whisky valued at $125,000. The entire loss is estimated at more than $200,000.

Slays Wife, Children and Self.

George C. Chauvenet, a prominent resident of Fremont, Ind., killed his wife with a hatchet and then perhaps fatally injured his children, a boy of 11 and a girl of 13 years. Following this, Chauvenet rushed to the Southern Indiana railroad and laid down in a passing train and was killed. It is thought he suddenly became insane.

Among others who came were Thaxl, who was accompanied by his brother, who was a great among the Jews, who affected joint ownership in the chair of the Jews. The word Pharisee means separate. It meant virtually consecrated. It was a distinct claim that at one time they were a sore people, but they degenerated. This sect arose as a protest against heathen customs which had crept in among the Jewish birth and were practiced instead of remaining separate and pure, they became conformists, and lost their spiritual power. The Sadducees were worldly minded (Mark 2:22.) John rebuked both classes and likened them to vipers.

John said to them, "Who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth fruit meet for repentance: the wrath of God against all ungodliness and all unrighteousness." He was a stern reformer, the first reformer since the time of Elijah, John and Jesus. Many are making the same sad mistake to-day, thinking church membership will save them.

He warned them that justice was knocking at the door, that Jehovah lays his axe against the tree, while he takes of his coat, preparatory to chopping it down, so God had suspended judgment a little while giving them opportunity to repent. God gives nations and individuals opportunity to repent, but he will "not hold his anger forever." The time comes when sentence will be pronounced.

John preached the doctrine of conversion. The word conversion means literally, to turn about, to display form and embraces justification, regeneration, repentance, faith and the witness of the Spirit.

A Turbine Locomotive Next.

President Held of the Glasgow University has announced that a new steam turbine electric locomotive is being constructed, which, if found practicable, will undoubtedly lead to the application to the railway system of the world the turbine system which has so revolutionized steam propulsion on the ocean. It is the question of the cost of such a locomotive which is taking double all its in general adoption.

Sunday School LESSON

Subject for Jan. 2, 1910.

John the Forerunner of Jesus. Matt. 3:1-12.

Golden text: "The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord; make His path straight." Matt. 3:3.

(The following extracts are from McLaughlin's Commentary on St. Matthew.)

"In those days" (the days when Jesus was residing in Nazareth, as recorded in the previous chapter) "came John the Baptist." He was the second of the great Jewish reformers in modern times, as recorded in Luke 1:5-64. He was a Nazarite.

John came preaching—that is, like a herald announcing the coming kingdom of heaven. Preaching is heralding, or "telling," the story of Jesus who will come and set up His kingdom in the hearts of those who turn from sin, (in cause thus proclaiming the nearness of the long settled country near the river Jordan) of Judea. His message was a stern one. He was no time-serving church to reconciled. Hilph, John and Jesus were strangers to the world.

The double message of his ministry (repentance and the kingdom) (Mt. 3:2). His stern command was "Repent." The word repent means literally "to change the mind after wards; hence to change one's mind. It means more than to be sorry because of the folly and hallucinations of sin, to change his mind towards it, in the sense of being ashamed of it. Repentance is accompanied by sorrow, but mere sorrow for sin is not repentance. Judas Iscariot may have felt sorry for their sins, but like him they repented not, they did not change and confessed it. John gives this reason why they should repent, "For the kingdom of heaven is at hand." The phrase "kingdom of heaven" is used only by Matthew. Mark uses the phrase "kingdom of God." Albert Barnes thinks "the reign of heaven" is a better translation.

Matthew here tells us that John fulfilled the prophecy of Isaiah, "The voice of one crying in the wilderness: prepare ye the way of the Lord; make his paths straight."

John was a voice. Truth needs to be voiced. It is not enough to print or write it. It needs to be voiced by a living man. A sermon is more than words. It is the expression of the personality of a living man. Character cannot be hidden. A holy man like John may be in the wilderness, but people will find him out. The whole country came to his preaching. It was a genuine revival. Men genuinely repented and were baptized, confessing their sins.

Among others who came were Thaxl, who was accompanied by his brother, who was a great among the Jews, who affected joint ownership in the chair of the Jews. The word Pharisee means separate. It meant virtually consecrated. It was a distinct claim that at one time they were a sore people, but they degenerated. This sect arose as a protest against heathen customs which had crept in among the Jewish birth and were practiced instead of remaining separate and pure, they became conformists, and lost their spiritual power. This has been the history of many sects and churches since that day. The disciples were the children and materialists of that day. FATHER TIME LOOKS BACKWARD IN HIS FLIGHT

RECORD OF MOST IMPORTANT EVENTS OF THE YEAR 1909

The year 1909 is destined to figure as an important one in history. What a involvements it has been, and what great its manifold wonders of happening and accomplishment: Flying a aeroplate; the North Pole discovered; Turkey reformed; Persia reformed; England ideas of the rights of taxation upset; India restive; China subjected to a mass of new impositions; Belgium passing under a new and, it is to be hoped, more beneficent rule; events now in progress in Nicaragua that may lead to a further extension of civilization and peace; the distance across the Atlantic further shortened; the distance across our own country about to be decreased; wireless telegraphy entering into the realm of common utility; efforts now being made for the better protection of life in mines and on the great waters. If the case man living in 1909 could wonders, as recorded in Luke 1:5-64. He was a Nazarite.

SERMON FROM SHAKESPEARE

And this our life, exempt from public haunt
Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones, and good in everything.

—As You Like It, Act II, Sc. 1

From the earliest Christian times men dealing with ethical questions have turned to the Bible for their texts. Still the Infinite Mind stands the touchstone two thousand years and! Coming down the ages has there yet been a sermon of more practical thoughtfulness, who have snatched fire from the Altar of the Ancients, and carried it to the right men thinking the rough places of earth. Shakespeare, Milton, Wordsworth, Emerson have all moments when they have "seen God face to face."

Tennyson, the second writer, who have revealed the will of God, stands distinguishing from other poets, who have been crystallized into Hundred lines on his pages than in those of any other man who has striven for the amelioration and uplifting of the human race. In every scene of his historical dramas there are passages that stand out as the stars in a clear Nights guides to the traveler through life's way.

Shakespeare himself saw the important spiritual truths were to be learned from Nature's book. In the Forest of Arden there were no books, but the lack of Nature's book furnished to the banished duke and his brothers be enough. The thoughtful reader can find sermons in Shakespeare, "For he every man were a soap further, and found insights in trees, books in the running brooks and sermons in stones. The words great word is to interpret Nature's plan. He is a priest stand for between the Infinite and man, giving their eternal truth. Shakespeare is generous as an interpreter of Nature's ways and the hearts of men with a warm insight. The modern world is deep consideration admirable illustration this.

In the Forest of Arden is a body of sylvan men. They have been robers and cutthroats. They have lived in the world in the twenty, in Europe. In certain theatrical their estates they have long forced to retreat to the woods and live from "second to property hand." The palace walls, the flowery comforts they enjoyed the struggle for power and place have been only their curse. Nature has the clear sighted of blue sky seen through the spreading branches of the oaks, the brooks that dance and sparkle in their journey to the sea, the very grass teach them lessons of life. Life in these in Nature they are brought into harmony with the Infinite. Their sympathies are broadened. They who were want to see evil everywhere, find good everywhere. They who were want to see evil everywhere, find good everywhere. Even the grass, mentioned of the builder, has its uses and may discourse wisely to his reader.

It is not difficult to understand how the trees, running and singing to the wind, how the brooks, babbling to the pebbles, how the stones, speak to the man silent. A hundred poets have been inspired by trees and flowers, by certain streams and running brooks, by the sparkling stones which seem to it to speak to the heart or mind of poet? When Shakespeare wrote, "Sermons in stones, and good in everything," he could not possibly have understood the full significance of his words. In a vague way he felt that all created things had their purposes. He says of them:

"O mistress is the powerful grace, that lies
In herbs, plants, stones and their true qualities;
For nothing so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give."

Yet the modern man now wonderful is the birth of the expression "sermons in stones." The footprints of the Creator have been traced by woman of the rocks. Hammer in hand he geologist goes forth learning from the stones. The history of this vast world has been handed down in impressionable tablets of stone. Hammer in hand the paleontologist goes forth, and the living things that inhabited Nature's ages ago are reconstructed. Hammer in hand the botanist wrests secrets of plant life from the cliffs. But for the lessons learned from the rocks the world would still be living in darkness and superstition.

It would be well for all men to occasionally get into contact with Nature. In the city the life is artificial. It is a struggle for existence, and the wheels of trade ruthlessly crush the weak and incompetent. The blue sky is hidden by smoke and tall edifices; the eye rarely beholds green things, but occupies itself with seeing of artificial displays. The ear is deafened with the unceasing roar of traffic. The heart is hardened in the rush for wealth and honors. It is unlikely to the soul to seek the greenwood at times, to see the blue sky in its vast entirelity, to hear the tongues that speak from the trees, to learn from the babbling brooks to sit at the feet of those silent but eloquent preachers the stones that bear the eternal title.

PROBLEM OF TAXES

An Important Report Made to the National Grange.

It Outlines the Position Which the Grange Takes on the Question of Taxation—The Committee's Conclusions Summarized in Eleven Articles.

The report of the committee on taxation of the national grange was prepared and presented by T. C. Atkeson of West Virginia, chairman of the committee, and was an important document. We give the committee's conclusions, the report being adopted:

Since taxation is necessary for the government of each, the law governing property, intellectual or corporate, therefore is a matter of state control, and should be left to the states, subject to the restrictions imposed by the state constitutions.

In order to secure equality in the distribution of the burdens of government, all property possessed of the power of taxation on account of the income it may yield, or from any other cause, should be entitled to the same exemptions, for the same or similar reasons, that are which exists in the case of mortgages on real estate, and the debts secured by the mortgage and the notes or bonds of the "mortgagee" be exempt from taxation in the general property, or personal property, and taxed in the locality where the mortgaged property lies.

There should be no exemption of any species of property from taxation, personal, from taxation, for the purposes of revenue, levied by the state.

If state and local revenues are to be raised from ordinary sources, the state revenues should be raised from corporate franchises, from income on bonds, from tobacco, coal, oil, gas, telegraph, telephone, express, sleeping car, parlor car companies, street railroads, ferry, bridge, and turnpike companies, theaters, opera houses, concert halls, and private banks, insurance, fire and life insurance companies, banks, brokers and pawnbrokers, dealers in specific, collateral inheritance, sale of goods, wares, and merchandise.

All corporation real estate and personal property, and all personal property, wherever it may be, should be taxed when owned for individuals.

The local tax of corporation property is to be levied on a valuation equal to the market value of the property, or at the highest value of the limited description authorized by law, based on the value of the tax as the tolerance of the original cost of the property, and the value of the property possible consideration should be taken to secure equality of assessment between individuals and between assessed distillers.

We favor the denial of the right of action of the holders of some bonds, etc., which have not been issued, or have been and all such notes, bonds, etc., to be issued and taxed at the same rate below the value as other property, property in the same locality is assessed below its true cash value.

No gilt shall be permitted to make a specific assessment and all property everywhere shall be uniformly assessed at its fair cash value or at a uniform percent below cash value—say, 20 to 50 per cent.

We favor the enactment of a law that will secure a fair and equitable taxation of all bonds, notes, obligations and securities, upon the basis that other property is taxed, and we believe the market value of the capital stock plus the real estate will be found to be the most equitable ascertained method of valuation.

OHIO GRANGE AFFAIRS.

State Grange Has $28,000 in Treasury and 4,500 New Members.

State Master T. C. Laylin of Ohio reports that never have halls been kept in good and dedicated to the use of the order, indicating to some degree the prosperity of the organization. Not by new subordinate granges have been organized since the last annual meeting and eleven reorganized. Two Pomona and two juvenile granges have also been organized. Four thousand five hundred new members have been added since one year ago. The general halls day is well provided against by a comfortable building of $27,000 in the treasury. During a portion of the last two organizing has been kept in the field, the expense being shared equally by the state and national grange. This experiment has proved very satisfactory. The field meetings were largely attended and afforded an excellent means for getting a hearing upon the principles and work of the Order before the people, of the state. These meetings were become so numerous that it has been found necessary to organize a speakers' bureau composed of the officers of the Ohio state grange, the secretary of the national grange and a half dozen other prominent Patrons of the state.

National Co-operation.

For the purpose of presenting to the next national grange meeting a plan for national co-operation such as would be fair and equitable to both producer and consumer it was voted to appoint a committee to consider the matter. This committee consists of Messrs. Hause of Missouri, Black of Kansas, Creety of Pennsylvania, Wilson of Illinois, Jones of Indiana, Pettit of California and Stetson of Maine.

Dimitted Members.

Sometimes the plentiful crises whether a dimitted member from another grange should be received in a new grange as a charter member. The only way in which it can be done is to have the dimitted member pay the full charter membership fees. He will not say grange so long as he holds his dimit card, but is not entitled to receive the new annual work.

The editor of this department was pleased to learn at the national grange meeting that extracts from this column were read at almost every meeting of one of the granges in Kansas.

Now This Is Good Farming.

An Iowa Grange Compares Prices Received and Paid Now With Those of Thirty Years Ago and Says One Can Pay For a Farm Easier Now Than Then.

At a meeting of Jones Mill grange, in Iowa, C. H. Johnson read a paper on the opportunities and possibilities which are offered the young man of today who is willing to take up an honorable employment and enter upon his life work as a progressive farmer. The superior inducements offered at this time are compared to the conditions that existed from twenty to thirty-five years ago.

"The purchasing power of our products at that time," said Mr. Johnson, "was as follows: We paid for the land in the raw and on the farm and the rates of interest on borrowed money all combined to make life on the farm a most serious problem and indeed caused many a young man to leave the farm and seek the city in hopes that he might secure a paying position with less effort and more that he might secure a paying position with less effort and more pay.

"Let us now make a comparison of prices of farm products and cost of farm supplies," continued the speaker. "Thirty years ago we could in Iowa buy ten yards of calico for $1, taking forty pounds of butter; today the same amount of butter will buy 200 yards. Twenty-five years ago you paid $17 for 100 pounds of barbed wire, which took four to hundreds of oats; today 100 bushels of oats will buy 1,200 pounds of wire. Twenty-five years ago we paid $225 for a mower; taking 150 bushels of good wheat; today the same amount of wheat will buy four self binders. Thirty-five years ago the wife took a trip on the railroad a distance of 400 miles. Round trip, which cost $16, which took 200 dozen of eggs; today the same number of eggs will carry you 3,000 miles, with better accommodations. Twenty-eight years ago a steel plow were borrow cost $23, which took 1,000 pounds of pork; today the same pork will buy two sets of the same quality of harness.

"Shoes are some higher, but you can buy today from the products of the farm three pairs where you could buy one pair thirty years ago.

"Thirty years ago you paid for sheeting a price of farmers $4, which took thirteen bushels of corn; today the same corn will show five horses.

"Thirty years ago a bill of lumber cost $7,000 for one year took 4,000 bushels of corn. The same bill, which today is $1,200, will take 2,500 bushels of corn, leaving 1,500 bushels of corn to sell, bringing $300, which you will have left after being robbed of the $800 advance. Now, this you can do: Take to the poor or buy more land.

"Fifty years ago you paid $100 interest on $1,000 for one year, which took 400 bushels of corn; today the same corn will pay interest on $4,000 for one year.

"I contend, all things considered that you can buy a farm at the advanced price of today and pay for it easier than you could thirty years ago."

Co-operation in Kansas.

The Furness' Co-operative bank at Olathe is making money, pleasing the stockholders and its patrons. Its stock is worth $300 per share, par being $100, and none of it is on the market. Its capital stock is $50,000 paid up, $50,000 surplus, and its deposits amount to $115,000, received by the guarantee fund of the state of Kansas. It pays a dividend of 10 per cent per annum. The Patrons' Fire and Tornado association carries risks amounting to $13,000,000, net gain from Jan. 1 to Nov. 1 was $1,000,000 in risks, $200,000 more than was written during the first ten years of its existence. The cost of insurance has averaged $2 per thousand in the face of great losses.

The local grange participated in the industrial parade at the Galion (O.) street fair with a float decorated with farm products, upon which rode its uniformed degree team and the grange goat. Out of fifty-three floats it won second prize.

Ager—Heise.

A very pleasant wedding event occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs Geo. Ager on the evening of Jan. 1st when their daughter, Laura May, was united in marriage with Mr. Edward Heise. Miss Carrie Bartlett was bridesmaid, and the groom's best man was his brother, Wm. Heise.

Following the ceremony about 40 guests sat down to an elaborate wedding dinner. The decorations were evergreen and white roses. The gifts were numerous and useful. Rev. F. M. Taylor performed the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Heise will reside in Charlevoix.

Health and Money.

"There is a difference between these two temporal blessings, health and money. Money is the most envied but the least enjoyed. Health is the most enjoyed but the least envied, and this superiority of the latter is still more obvious when we reflect that the poorest man would not part with health for money but the richest would gladly part with their money for health," said Juvenal. People are paying more attention to health matters than they used to. They understand disease better also. That is why Chiropractic is coming to the front so rapidly. The people demand it. Chiropractic's tower of strength lies in the fact that the people can understand it. If you are searching for health go and talk to Dr. L. E. Bell, Chiropractor, 108 Park Ave., and you will find that her explanation of its principles appeals to your reason. 29-32

A unfortunation at the former place now figures at the sale of rat breeding that the city has really gotten rid of 42,500 rats. That is all because a man found a family of 13 and allied them for the bounty which the city offered. That 13 would have multiplied to the 42,500 if they had not been disposed of when they were.

—The statement is made in the press of the state, the claim coming from Flint, that property values in that city have increased 140 per cent within the past ten years. It will be recalled that Flint is a prohibition city, and that no retrograde movement has taken place since the saloons were abolished. On the other hand, it is claimed that 2,500 new buildings were erected the past summer, and probably no town in the state is growing as rapidly as Flint and people are flocking there from all parts of the country because of the labor offered by her great industries and the opportunities offered the business man.

—The pledge that 100,000 men are signing to "Make Michigan Dry," does not ask for more than the resolution passed by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church. That reads thus: "No political party has the right to expect the support of Christian men so long as that party stands committed to the license system or fails to put itself on record against the saloon."

THE CEMENT PLANT

Factory Site Located and Purchased—Definite Plans Consummated.

When the Standard Portland Cement and Lime Co. officials were here last week a real estate transaction occurred that placed the seal of certainty on the cement factory proposition.

The transaction was the purchase from Archibald Buttars of fractional lot 2, section 28, town 34, N. R. 8 w., consisting of approximately thirty acres, and lying and fronting on the outer bay just east of the south point.

This is not quarry property, although it is unquestionably over the immense limestone deposit that crops out at the quarries. It was bought as a site for the works, and along its lake frontage the docks and breakwater will be built.

All last week a staff of engineers and surveyors was at work marking boundaries and making the necessary preliminary notes upon which to formulate plans for beginning the work of construction.

Death of Mrs. Holme.

Mrs. Esther Ann Mayall Holme was born at Ashton-Under-Lyne, Lancashire, England, April 6, 1834, and departed this life at Charlevoix, Mich., Jan. 6, 1910, at the ripe age of 75 years and 9 months.

On Nov. 24, 1864, deceased was united in marriage to Wm. Holme, soon after which they came to America. The following year they settled on a farm in Leelanau County, Mich., where they lived a pioneer life with its privations and hardships. Here six children were born to them; and here two of them in early life were buried.

During those early years Capt. Holme was sailing part of each year except five, and upon the devoted and faithful mother rested the responsibility and care of the little family. After 22 years, or in 1887 they moved to Charlevoix, and here Mrs. Holme has since resided.

Mrs. Holme was a cheerful and devoted mother, a kind neighborly neighbor, an earnest, consistent and trustful Christian, and forever 22 years was a worthy and faithful member of Charlevoix Rebekah church. She was also a member of the Rebecca Lodge, which order attended the funeral services in a body.

On Christmas day Mrs. Holme, together with other members of the family went to spend the day with Mrs. Arthur Beattie and family. She was taken sick that day and never got out again. Just a few hours before her death she spoke so confidently of her "unshaken trust and faith in Jesus."

She leaves to mourn her loss two sons and two daughters, Wm. Hulme Jr., Herbert Hulme, Mrs. Arthur Beattie and Mrs. M. K. Chur; besides 12 grandchildren and two great grandchildren.

Funeral services were held from the late residence Monday at 10:00 a. m., conducted by Rev. F. Dewey Eble of the Baptist church. Interment in the family lot at Ironton followed.

Capt. Ira Morehouse Loses His Vessel.

The news comes that the schooner Abel C. Hackley foundered at sea in the Atlantic recently. The crew were taken off by a steamer and taken to Bermuda.

Capt. Ira Morehouse, formerly of this place, was master and one-third owner of the Duckley.

This is the second vessel Capt. Morehouse has lost—the schooner Chas. Lathing being been stranded on the Massachusetts coast several years ago.

The Lathing was taken to salt water from the lakes by Capt. Morehouse.

—Local option has deprived Justice of the Peace John P. Frisbie, of Hillsdale, of his job. The one case he has took at it. Justice Frisbie, who presides over one of Hillsdale's two lower courts, today handed in his resignation, effective March 1, saying that as a result of local option the position is no longer lucrative. There are only a few drunks nowadays, he says, and these come in from neighboring towns, and the paltry days of rushing business in saloons and disorderliness are more. Our justice court is enough now, he says. Alas, the gold old days!

FRED J. BAILEY DEAD

Manager of the Charlevoix Inn Dies Suddenly at Mobile, Ala.

The sad news was received here Sunday morning of the sudden death at Mobile, Ala., of Fred J. Bailey, for the past three years manager of the Inn, of this city.

Mr. Bailey and his wife had just arrived at Mobile, where they were to spend the remainder of the winter with relatives. Mr. Bailey left Charlevoix in November, apparently in the best of health, and looked forward to the next springs opening of his hotel with more than usual eagerness, for he had grown to like Charlevoix, and had formed many warm friendships.

He was formerly in poor health, but the past year he was particularly robust and cheerful, attributing his improvement to Christian Science in which he has taken a very active part here. Indeed, Mr. and Mrs. Bailey had much to do with the founding and growth of the Charlevoix Society.

Deceased was practically a member of Charlevoix Lodge, No. 262, F. & A. M., having two degrees. The degree at his disposal here prevented his taking the third, but would have taken it soon after his arrival here next spring.

Mr. Bailey was a most charming gentleman, and one of the most successful hotel managers in the country. His friends were legion, and his manliness and always dignified courtesy made itself felt wherever he went.

Charlevoix sincerely mourns the loss of Fred J. Bailey.

THE U. S. HATCHERY

Plant to Make Another Three Months Run on Lake Trout Eggs.

Frank N. Clark, superintendent of U. S. fish hatcheries, was in the city Thursday and arranged for the re-opening of the Charlevoix auxiliary hatchery, but on a larger scale than ever before operated.

The department has on hand an unusually large supply of lake trout eggs, which the main hatcheries are unable to care adequately for. To meet the demands Mr. Clark determined to enlarge the work of the local hatchery, and arranged with the city to set up a number of hatching troughs in the boiler room of the old water-works building, adjoining the regular hatchery.

Work on the extention will be begun at once, and the enlarged plant will be in operation in ten days or two weeks, in charge of Mr. A. T. Stewart. From two to twelve millions of eggs will be handled.

The situation affords another and a much stronger argument for the establishment of a permanent hatchery here with growing ponds and other accessories. It is conceded by the department and strongly asserted by Superintendent Clark that Charlevoix possesses more and greater natural advantages for this work than any other point in the state region, and he has long held the opinion that a hatchery for this territory is very much needed. This opinion has been given official expression in more than one annual report.

Mr. Clark has plans, which he is not making public, that will give Charlevoix one of the most extensive and complete plants in the whole chain of government hatcheries.

When Congress can be induced to appropriate the necessary funds Mr. Clark's wishes will be realized. There is very little doubt that within two years such a plant will be authorized here.

—The monotony of the office came near being turned into a red hot time in this office Tuesday, says the Cheboygan Democrat. The office was alone a match on the book case behind him; the match broke to two. As he stood and did it, he got scared and dropped the stiffs, and went on smoking. Pretty soon the boys came in from the coasting room and put him out. The broken end of the match had jammed into his coat pocket and set fire to a bunch of letters, and the lining of his coat. No insurance.

BEULAH HOME AFFAIRS

Judge Harris Makes a Statement Concerning Swift and the Home.

From the Boyne City Journal. The reporter, on his rounds this morning, called upon J. M. Harris and asked him what there was new in the Swift matter and he said that he was not in a position to know anything new; that he had a week ago discontinued any active participation upon the behalf of Mr. Swift.

That it seemed to him that because of persistent misrepresentations made by some of Mr. Swift's friends, if not by Mr. Swift himself, as to the attitude of the Board of Control, that some expression of the Board's position in the matter might be given and that this position was that: The Board felt from the first that Mr. Swift should have every opportunity to defend himself from the charges that were made against him and also that it was the duty of the Board to see that the interests of Home were protected, and it soon appeared that Mr. Swift's idea as to what should be done was radically different from that of the Board. The Board, in a friendly way, at his request, asked Mr. Swift to temporarily surrender his Trusteeship and control to the Board pending the investigation and the trial in order that the public, who were contributing toward the support of the home, might be satisfied that conditions and the work was being protected and Mr. Swift contended that it was against his interest to do that and there was no way in which he could be kept of a trust for the reason that it belonged to him personally and suggested that he would secure any one with the money on hand, who would go his unit, and offered to turn it over to the members of the Board for that purpose, and the Board were advised that if it were a trust fund for a particular purpose that such an assignment would be illegal and the money nor properties could be used for that purpose and in order to further secure these interests and because of the declination to make an assignment of it, the Board applied for and secured an injunction temporarily restraining any such disposition of the property and at that time didn't furnish bail for Mr. Swift for reasons that appeared to mean no malicious, and further, that it was in the interest of Mr. Swift not to give bail at that time. Later the bail required was

The Wand of Sleep
OR
The Devil-Stick

By the Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," Etc.

THE WAND OF SLEEP is a story of the most unique construction, original plot and peculiar action. It deals with that strange phase of West Indies life known as "fetich," or "voodooism." A beautiful girl is beloved by three different men, two of whom fall victims to the effects of the devil-stick, or the "wand of sleep," as it is called. The girl's nurse, full of the superstitions of her dark race, is a forbidding but fascinating character in this striking romance.

This serial will be welcomed for its novelty and freshness. It is full of stirring episodes, is well conceived and brilliantly written. It must receive great interest from readers who love a lively story, embellished with action and incidents that verge on the marvelous.

CHAPTER I.

Laurence Jay was a retired major, a bachelor, and the proprietor of a small estate. He had been all over the world, a soldier in African campaigns, in a South American insurrection, in beating the service he decided that it was better to live in Yellow Jack country than a monsoon in town, and active upon little income, he purchased "Ashatoo" from a ruined stock breeder, formerly the place had been called Sandy-hills, after its original owners, but Jru had changed the name, in honor of a campaign in which he had participated.

He had been present at the downfall of King Kofoe in Africa; he had commanded the expedition up some crooked stream, also greatly during which commander Jay received a his arm, and he had received a wound and a medal. In gratitude for these gifts, old Kofoe, who had some money, had, on ceding the major the land, sent him a magnificent gift of a West African kingdom, and presented him with a wife, a young girl, who had been betrothed to the chief, and had fled with his lover.

It was then that the Major displayed the goodness of his heart and the sensitivity of his nature. Surprising his own servants, he established permanently from the place of his birth, and to take charge of the little property owned by the girl. Then he bought Sandyhills, set estate and house in order, and called it "Ashatoo," and devoted his life to gardening and to the care of the whom he had saved from the jaws of death. Ashatoo was a small place, and, moreover, pitched his bachelorhood, he had no servants in the house, but had permission to use the Sandyhills cottage, and to have his meals there, and he was accustomed to dine at the house, and thus the Major and Ewald lived, the latter in the room once or twice, the neither of them cared much for his younger personality, and there was no surprise in the fact that the Major had invited the man to meet them on the occasion of his visit to Ashatoo.

Jru, disengaged simple soul—was perhaps taken by surprise, but, however, pitched his bachelorhood, he had no servants in the house, and

Northern Michigan

The D. G. H. & M. railroad has purchased a new 65-ton locomotive.

Traverse City has a cider mill which makes sixty cars of cider yearly.

Railroad figures show that Northern Michigan fruit brought growers over three million dollars.

A Traverse City man found two pearls, valued at twenty dollars, in a dish of raw oysters the other day.

During December forty-two inches of snow fell at Traverse City, snow falling on twenty-five of the thirty-one days of the month. This is the heaviest snowfall in twenty-eight years. In 1882 forty-one inches fell. Twenty-one inches is the average for December.

The man who sold the farm to Mrs. Charles F. Tuck in an advertisement for the Grand Traverse Region. But a short time ago, he came here from Indiana, paying $2,500 for the place. Last year he sold his fruit crop for $1,025 and, recently, he sold the farm for $1,000, leaving his net profit very close to $2,700. This leaves not entirely the question of rent and living which would probably amount to a thousand dollars more.

East Jordan Enterprise: Mrs. Jas J. Bennett died at her home in Chicago last Sunday morning and her body is being brought here for interment. Mrs. Bennett had been in poor health for several years, yet her death at this time was entirely unexpected and is a shock to her many friends here. Her sister, Mrs. W. F. Empey had gone to Chicago to make her a visit, arriving but a few hours before Mrs. Bennett passed away.

Cadillac News: The suggestion which has been made that the headquarters of the Western Michigan Development Bureau should be removed from Traverse City to Baldwin is not a good one. Grand Traverse county is typical of the territory represented by the bureau, Lake county is not. Traverse City is one of the representative cities of our section of the tie state; Baldwin certainly is not. It is true, of course, that official business could be transacted as well at Baldwin as at Traverse City, but the work of the Western Michigan Development Bureau is not altogether a matter of writing letters and mailing circulars. So far as we can see there is no purpose applicable to the district as a whole that would not be better served by having the headquarters of the Western Michigan Development Bureau at Traverse City than at Baldwin, and unless some combination makes such a move absolutely essential to the existence of the organization it should not be thought of.

Petoskey News: The notice in the Evening Journal last night relative to the discontinuance of the Horton Bay post office has started up a lively protest among the residents of the little village and the wires between there and this city kept pretty busy for a time this morning. The Horton Bayites don't propose to be obliterated from the government map without a struggle in self defense. They say that they have been proud of their name for too long a time to have it ruthlessly taken away from them by the "powers that be" at Washington. A vigorous protest will likely be made to the department, the Congressman and the U. S. Senators in an effort to have the order of discontinuance rescinded. It seems to be the policy of the department to dispose of all the small offices as fast as the patrons are reasonably supplied by rural carriers and hundreds of offices throughout the country have been thus taken up. Our neighbors up the lake may win out in the present case. Anyway here's hoping.

The Primary Law.

The primary law, framed at the last session of the legislature, has changed materially from the old law. This year it will be necessary for members of all parties to enroll their names. Those who do not desire to enroll themselves as republicans, democrats, prohibitionists, socialists, etc., may enroll as independent voters, but they must express their intention to vote for the candidates under the head of the party for which they enroll. Just how the independent voter may vote seems to be unsettled at present. Some maintain that a person enrolled as an independent voter may vote for a candidate on either of the other parties. Others maintain that an enrollment as an independent voter must confine his vote to candidates upon an independent ticket.

Figure it out yourself. If you cannot do that then address a letter to Hon. Fred M. Warner, governor, Lansing, and he will dispel the doubts that befuddle your intellect.

Just as Bad.

Courtesy over the telephone is a virtue, and it is just as offensive to the girl at the switchboard to be called a Dutch trust as it would be to be told that her hat isn't on straight.—Hartford Times.

Daily Thought.

Foresight is very wise, but foresorrow is very foolish, and coulive are at any rate better than dongeons in the air.—Sir Joan Lubbock.

United States Aristocracy.

In tale country there is a democracy of wealth and an aristocracy of intellectual ability. The ranks are open to all, and the poor boys of today are going to be the magnates of the future.

Real Wealth.

The wealth of a man is the number of things which he loves and blesses, which he is loved and blessed by.—Thomas Carlyle.

Had One Claim to Stake.

"The things I say may not be very clever," says the Philosopher of Folly, "but I call the attention of the much-bored public to the fact that I haven't made a North Pole epigram yet."

The Safer Side.

It is better to err by leaving unsaid what ought to have been said than by saying what ought not to have been said.

Too Steady.

"Haven't you a beau?" asked the sympathetic citizen. "Yes," answered Plodding Pete. "I had a steer home last night that I know I had a woodpile and a garden and a pump. And you'd get no more like a steady job as I resigned."

Best to Purify Water.

Ozone is the agent for purifying water, because it adds something except oxygen, which assists in aeration.

Pleasure.

There is a great distinction between pleasure loving and pleasure seeking. The first spirit seems to find pleasure almost everywhere, while the latter wearies itself in a fruitless search. The best pleasure is found of those who seek it not.

Making Conversation.

He (after embarrassing silence)—Don't you think the floor is unusually flat tonight?—Williams Purple Cow.

Woman as a Creator.

A woman who creates and sustains a home, and under whose hands children grow up, to be strong and generous and women, is a creator second only to God.—Helen Hunt Jackson.

Poor Opinion of Countrymen.

One of the great fatalities of England has stated that not above 50,000 people in all Britain can read and understand the ordinary leaders newspaper.

The Immortal Bard

One of the earliest sayings Shakespeare could never have written the words of a popular song. We are inclined to believe he might have done even that. In one of his sonnets he makes "Beet's" rhyme with "sweets."

Japanese Public Ovens.

Most of the cooking of the Japanese cities is done in public ovens, which are maintained at convenient places at moderate cost to patrons.

Making Enemies.

He (after embarrassing silence)—Don't you think the floor is unusually flat tonight?—Williams Purple Cow.

Rudyard Kipling slandered woman by defining her as "a rag and a bone and a hank of hair," but a Lonsdale lady, seven years married, gets back rhythmically with this sprightly rhyme of a man: "A jag and a drone and a tank of air."—Springfield Republican.

A HARD WORKER.

His Soiled Appearance Brought Him a Raise in Salary.

The eccentric proprietor of a large newspaper in London had a way of appearing in the compositing and proofroom at the most unexpected times, and as his visits often resulted in a general shakeup of the working forces of the paper they were awaited with fear and trembling by the employees.

One time one of the pressmen, an excellent workman, who had been there many years, but was sometimes guilty of a lapse of sobriety, had a black eye and was in a quandary as to what excuse he should offer if the proprietor noticed it. By a sudden inspiration he seized an ink roller and daubed some ink on his face, quite covering the discoloration. Presently the governor came in and, with the foreman, went through the room, commenting on every detail and looking very sharply at every workman. When about to leave he suddenly pointed to the inky pressman and asked: "What is that man's name?

The man quaked in his shoes until he heard the governor continue slowly: "I want you to see that that man's wages are every more wages. He is the only man in the room who looks as if he had been working."—London Tit-Bits.

Curacao's Good Schools.

In all Curacao, perhaps, from the most exclusive to the humblest government school, in which the little black or parchment Dutch twins see best, Dutch, French, Spanish, English and Esperanto are used and taught. By the neighboring islands and even on the mainland and as far away as Central America these schools are highly regarded, and a large number of foreign children are sent to Curacao to get their education.—Charles Johnson Post in Century.

Corn in Cornerstones.

In laying the cornerstone of one of the new college buildings at the Missouri station a perfect ear of corn was placed in the cornerstone. It would be interesting to know whether those who open that stone generations hence will have imported on that corn.

THE WOODEN HORSE.

An Old Time Form of Military Punishment in England.

Torture on a grand scale in England went out with Tyrion, the sixteenth of Buckingham, but torture on a small scale continued to be practiced on military offenders down to the eighteenth century. The form most frequently resorted to was that known as the wooden horse, to ride which was the punishment accorded for petty thefts, insubordination and so on. "The wooden horse was made of planks nailed together so as to form a sharp ridge or angle about eight or nine feet long. This ridge represented the back of the horse and was supported by four posts or legs about five feet high placed on a stand made movable by trucks. To complete the resemblance to the animal intended to crestion a head and tail were added.

When a soldier was sentenced, "either by court martial or by his commanding officer, to ride the horse he was placed on the brute's back, with his hands tied behind him, and frequently enough, in order to increase the pain, muskets were fastened to his legs to which these doves of, as intimated, introduced steel from kissing his off.—London Graphic.

A COSTLY ACCIDENT.

The Wave of a Hand, an Upset Ink Bottle and Bankruptcy.

The mere motion of a hand ruined Dobbert & Co., one of the largest and wealthiest of English engineering firms. They were an American firm tendered bids for the building of the great Assuan hydraulic dam for the government. Jacob Colbert, who was the brain and center of the business, spent six months in the blending and restring and bid all his plans ready. He did not go himself, and material was bought in enormous quantities. A time limit had been set both for the commencement and finish, and Colbert was perfecting his plans and making survey of the season's details, with all the formalis spread out on the table before him, when he startled out his hand, overturned an ink pot and drowned the most important of the papers in a black sea.

Colbert had a good memory. In a fever of anxiety he tried to reconstruct his plans from memory notes. It was impossible, and he called on the Hindoo government for more time. Time was refused, and Dobbert & Co. failed to meet the ground of delay, as the agreement allowed. Colbert could not get his work through in time, and the Yankee firm, which now advanced a dozen competitors, lost its good glass, got the job. The loss drove Dobbert & Co. to insolvency, and the great Kaura bridge in Russia is American built.—London Scraps.

Definition of Tact.

Mrs. Pyne—Tact means certainly possessing a lot of it. Mrs. Hyne—What is you definition of tact? Mrs. Pyne—That is a woman's ability to make her husband believe he is having his own way.—Lippincott's.

Hatred's Dividends.

Hatred takes time and energy and health. And the dividends on the investment are painfully small and unsatisfactory.—Atchison Globe.

A mere nobleman is like a wretch that he may die rich.—Burton.

THE BEST MAN.

At One Time He Was More Useful Than Ornamental.

Do you know how "the best man" who plays so important a part in marriages that have any pretense to fashionable, once upon a time he was dignified a position that was useful as well as ornamental?

In olden days the Swedish bridegroom found it desirable, in fact, to have, several "best men" to defend him from the assaults of rivals and prevent them from carrying away his bride. The Scandinavian warrior of ancient times was far too lofty in his ideas to condescend to plead for a maiden's hand. So he politely waited until some other man who was more gallant had obtained the fair one's consent.

Then when all the details had seemed pretty arranged the proud warrior, with a body of well trained retainers, dashed down on the wedding party and, if strong enough, carried away the bride.

The "best man" (and it was very essential that they should be the best men to those days) therefore became necessary fixtures in marriage ceremonies, and they were so well esteemed and their popularity became so prominent that when the reason for their existence was in course of time removed they were still retained.—Pearson's Weekly.

Four Useful Senses.

The naturalist of Wolverck-in-the-Hole was pointed out to a rabbit squatting close under a bush, and the rabbit had behaved in a manner that they could not see the little animal.

"This is a wonderful ability to make her husband believe he is having his own way.—Lippincott's.

Hatred's Dividends.

Hatred takes time and energy and health. And the dividends on the investment are painfully small and unsatisfactory.—Atchison Globe.

RAY LAMPHERE DIES, PLEADING INNOCENCE

Alleged Accomplice of Mrs. Belle Gunness, Archmurderess, Succumbs to Consumption.

HIRED HAND ON MURDER FARM

Passes Away Without Making Confession Hoped for by Indiana Authorities.

Ray Lamphere, who was charged with the murder of Mrs. Belle Gunness and subsequently convicted of arson in connection with the burning of the home on her "murder farm," near Laporte, died at the State penitentiary in Michigan City, Ind., of tuberculosis.

The man's single deed of sacrifice the supposed arch-murderess in slaying the ten victims whose bodies were found buried about the farm after her disappearance in April, 1908, made no statement to the prison officials.

In the past few weeks State's Attorney Ralph Smith, who prosecuted Lamphere, and officials of the penitentiary have sought to obtain from the prisoner a statement. To all questions, however, Lamphere has steadfastly replied that he knew nothing which could throw further light on the wholesale murders.

Lamphere was 35 years old, and for three years prior to the disappearance of Mrs. Gunness and her three children had been employed as a field hand at the "murder farm."

The crimes, which have stupefied and diabolically executed, rivaled the famous Holmes-Chapin murders in Chicago and the blender murders in Kansas. Whether Mrs. Gunness was party to these crimes, and whether she escaped or was burned to death in her house in April, 1908, never has been satisfactorily explained. She formerly lived in Chicago and went to La Porte after her first husband had died under circumstances said to have been suspicious.

After establishing herself on the farm just outside Laporte, the woman is said to have been a frequent correspondent with matrimonial agencies in business centers of the country, she thus formed the acquaintance of a number of men. At least six of them went to Laporte, all of whom disappeared. Later, when the yard back of the farmhouse was excavated, the bodies of some of these admirers were identified among the ten which were found. Lamphere was arrested the day following the burning of the house. He had been seen in the vicinity of the building the night it burned.

OHIO ICE BOUND: FEAR FLOOD.

River Blocked from Pittsburg to Cincinnati and Coal Shipments Stop.

The Ohio river from Pittsburg to Cincinnati is closed to navigation, and according to reports, will be locked probably for several weeks. A rapid rise in the river caused by the ice gorges, it is feared, will result in heavy damage. Steamers are aground at the unusually severe backwater from the present heavy blocks of ice, and report a loss of property before a thaw sets in. At New Martinsville, W. Va., south of Wheeling, the Ohio is in the grip of an ice gorge miles in length while thousands of Wheeling and intermediate points, where bridges span the river, Coal operators and shippers are jubilant at fairly hard lift by the unlikely river blocks, as the shortage of cars and coal were waiting for the passing of the floe holidays to be sent south in coal fleets.

FINDS CHILDREN'S BODIES.

Fire Tragedy Costs Two Lives in the Village of Santa Claus, Ind.

In the village of Santa Claus, Ind., two children were buried to death the other night. Their mother found their charred and little bodies a few minutes before they died, in a room in which she had left them playing an hour before. The mother, Mrs. Fred Keller, wife of a young farmer, went to the barn to help him milk the cows. A thought of her girls, 2½ and 1½ years old, led her to leave her husband and return to the house. As she approached she heard the children screaming. The rooms were filled with smoke. Groping along the floors she came upon the bodies and dragged them to a door. The children died in her arms. The fire started from a defective flue.

20 HURT IN DEPOT EXPLOSION.

Gas Plant in Montreal Train Blows Up and Many May Die.

Over a score of people were injured in an explosion at the Place Viger station of the Canadian Pacific Railway in Montreal. Many of the victims were frightfully mangled, and the death list, it is feared, will be large. The explosion, which occurred shortly before the station at about 11 o'clock, was on the eve of starting. The station platform was crowded with a throng, seeing friends off on the Quebec and Ottawa expression, which ripped up the platform from end to end and buried more than a score of people in the debris. The gas plant on the Quebec train had blown up.

Citizens Sing to Burning Church.

While firemen fought a stubborn blaze in the basement of the Prospect Methodist church in Kansas City, Mo., children sang Christmas hymns on the top floor.

FRISCO TO RUN CARS.

City Approves Municipal Ownership Scheme at Special Election.

San Francisco the other day took the first step toward municipal ownership of its street railway lines when by a vote of 31,000 to 11,000 the people carried a bond issue to the amount of $2,000,000. The funds raised by the sale of these bonds are to be used in the construction of a beautiful electric one along Geary street and other thoroughfares from the heart of the business district to the ocean beach, a distance of about nine miles. This proposition has been submitted to the voters of the city four times, the other three votes being against the bonds. The present Geary street car line is an obsolete cable system. It is operated under a special permit granted to a private company by the supervisors after the franchise of the original company had expired. The causes leading to the voting of these bonds by a decisive majority after the same proposition had been three times defeated are numerous and complex. Possibly more than anything else the vote represents an expression of disatisfaction with the methods of a service of the United Railroads. The car system of the city under the present private monopoly admittedly is not good.

MOB HANGS VIRGINIA SLAYER.

Rape Hills Murderer's Flight, but Attempt at Vengeance Fails.

Following the killing at Surrey, Va., of Samuel Baker and the serious wounding of his widow and two children by Henry Pennington, a band of 100 took Pennington from jail and lynched him to a steam pipe. Pennington, who had been drinking, picked a quarrel with Baker, his enemy, and shot him while the latter was on his way to a Sunday school celebration with his wife, two children, and a friend, Wyatt Meadows. Seeing that he had killed Baker, Pennington started to the river, where he hoped to get away. Mrs. Baker called after Pennington and implored him to help her take the body home. The pace worked and Pennington went back to the spot where his victim lay dead. Next upon vengeance, Mrs. Baker grabbed Pennington's pistol from his pocket and shot twice at him. Her aim was bad, but she succeeded in wounding him in the hand and thigh. Pennington recovered possession of the pistol and then shot the women and attempted to kill Meadows and the two children. Pennington then fled, but was surrounded and captured by a posse on the outskirts of the town.

GIRL SLAIN; SUITOR SOUGHT.

Fugitive is Sought in Connection with Murder of Pretty Girl.

Without Gilbert, aged 23, years, resident of Muskall, a Pittsburg suburb, shot and killed his wife, seriously wounded a son three three shots at his father, wounding the latter and a bullet crashing through his brain, dying instantly. Gilbert, who is a former employee of the Carnegie Steel Company, came home late after a day of drinking with friends, according to the statement of the police. Meeting his wife as she awaited his coming at the top of a flight of stairs Gilbert fired a shot with his revolver. His wife's death body fell down the stairway. Hurrying a 15-year-old son, hearing the shots, run from a room, and was wounded in the shoulder by a bullet from the revolver in the hands of his enraged father. Grace, a 11-year-old daughter, coming to the stairway, was shot at three times the bullets missing her as she fled down the hall. A 3-year-old child was playing within ten feet of where the mother lay dead, but was unharmed by the father.

BOYCOTT AS A FOOD-PRICE CURE.

Movement of Nation-Wide Scope Started at Washington Meeting.

Plans for a national boycott of those combinations that increase the cost of living were laid in Washington the other night, when the National Anti-Trust League was launched. Members of Congress are interested in the new movement and immediate steps will be taken toward perfecting State organizations. Then, when prices soar, the league members by stopping the use of such articles or commodities as have gone above legal level will put them back again by refusing to furnish a market. The plan was tried in Germany a few years ago and which, according to a report, broke up a combine in coffee that had raised the price of the bean to almost prohibitive prices.

THREE ARE CREMATED IN WRECK ON ROCK ISLAND

Imprisoned in Tourist Sleeping Car, Passengers Are Burned After Train Is Derailed.

FORTY-FIVE PERSONS ARE HURT

Fatal Accident Occurs Near Trenton, Mo.—Cause of Cattastrophe Is Not Known.

Imprisoned in a tourist sleeping car and burned to death was the fate of perhaps three passengers on the westbound Colliers Special on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad three miles east of Trenton, Mo.

The number of all the victims have been recovered. One is that of Fireman O. P. Linsinger. Trainmen who recently lived at Eldon, Iowa. He was scalded and burned to death. The others are those of passengers and unidentified. Their bodies persons were injured, among them being:

Reginee W. T. Millington, Trenton, scalded; will recover.

William Flynn, agent Cudahy Packing Company, Kansas City, shoulder broken, on same head.

J. J. Gruing, Davenport, Iowa, leg broken, head cut.

Steve Gerard, Alabama, leg broken.

C. E. Spencer, Dallas, Texas; back sprained.

J. C. Childers, Anderson, Ind., sprains and bruises.

Mrs. Nancy Hendricks, Lette, Iowa, badly hurt about head, may die.

Julius Kaufman, Springfield, Mass., slight.

Heidi Siggel, Cleveland, Ohio, probably fatal.

The train was derailed at 5:46, while passing through a deep cut in a wooded country. The huge engine, a standard Pullman sleeper and the tourist sleeper caught fire and were destroyed and a portion of the chair car was burned. The bodies of two women were taken from the chair car. The women perished without a moment's warning to the passengers, and by the time they had realized what was happening the three cars were in flames.

The train was one of the heaviest and finest on the Rock Island service. It is known in summer as the Golden Rod and in winter as the California special. The cause of the accident is not known. The train was running at high speed. The heavy engine pinned the track and lanced Brier feet off the right of way. The coal also left the track and all but one tumbled over.

TO BARE FOOD GRAFT.

Wilson Promises to Expose Those Responsible for High Prices.

"We have already discovered that the farmer is not getting the enormous profits out of the product he raises," said Secretary Wilson of the Department of Agriculture here in a statement of prices of food amplified. "I have no doubt in the world," he continued, "that the same conditions will be found to prevail in most of the other lines of food products. The Department of Agriculture has agents in every State and every county in the country, and they have been ordered to report exhaustively on the cost of production and the return of value of all sorts of food products. As fast as we receive these figures we will compare them with the prices the same products bring in the cities where they are consumed. We shall then be in a fair to the public. We intend to expose the men and combinations whose it hurts or whom it benefits. I am convinced that the public is completed to be swindled in this way nearly everything. It cuts than it should, and I believe the farmer will bear one cut.

There is ample excuse for some of the high prices in the cost of living, over what it was years ago. The farm area is not keeping pace with the demands for food products. The cities seem to have more attractiveness for the industrial and the rural communities. The hurdle of immigration, as well as the natural increase of population, has to be fed and the farm is expected to furnish the food."

FLAMES KILL SEVEN CHILDREN.

Six Members of One Family—Cook Escapes with Two Babes.

Seven children, ranging in age from 2 to 12 years, were burned to death and three persons perhaps fatally injured when fire, followed by an explosion of gasoline, destroyed the home of Stephen Bronosky, a miner, at Sykesville, Pa. The dead children are members of the Bronosky family and the seven were asleep in the upper story of the home when the explosion occurred. Mr. and Mrs. Bronosky and the board or jumped from an upstairs window and were severely injured. Mrs. Bronosky was fatally injured. The cause of the accident is not known. The train was running at high speed. The heavy engine pinned the track and lanced Brier feet off the right of way. The coal also left the track and all but one tumbled over.

Two Bob Bank of $2,500.

Two unidentified robbers held up Wm. Ashe, cashier of the Bank of Ashe, Ark., bank, and robbed the bank of $2,500.

Dull Christmas Stories in Death.

Tony Villa fell from the fourteenth story of a new building in Dallas, Tex., and was killed. His attempted to slide down a cable on a freight elevator. The cable was covered with ice and Villa was unable to grasp the rope and slid to the bottom.

Life Prisoner Escapes.

William Davis, a life prisoner in the Ohio State penitentiary, sent up in 1902 for murder, in Lorain, Ohio, walked out of the prison remainant in Columbus and disappeared.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of Chicago trade says:

"Trade conditions show the clear activities in a strong position. Actual business, industrial and manufacture results now monopolize attention in the leading industries. The results have been equal to the expectations in various prominent branches and the outlook for the near future. Accumulations of forward orders is highly encouraging for the future.

"Weather conditions during the week favored an extended consumption of heavy-weight apparel and other needs, but the storm impeded freight movement, crop marketings and outdoor work. Wholesalers had large reorders in dry goods, clothing and footwear, and jobbers of all other staple lines were well sustained. Winter stocks in dealers' hands have been comfortably reduced.

"Banking reserve facility is largely in unoccupied deposits at interior points. Manufacturing disclosed little decline in operations with the year end. Money vacations a decidedly firm tone at 5 to 6½ per cent for choice commercial paper. Mercantile collections here and in Western points are satisfactory. Wholesale trade reflects a favorable comparison with previous experience.

"Bank clearings in 130 cities exceed those of the corresponding week in 1909 by 4.8 per cent, and compare with $4,172,052,000 last year.

"Failures reported to the Chicago mercantile agencies in the last week, 43 in 1909 and 28 in 1910. Those with liabilities over $1,000 number 17 against 11 last week, 11 in 1909 and 7 in 1907."

NEW YORK.

Quiet has followed the preceding week's rush of business in retail lines, while in wholesale lines salesmen are still on the road and investigating it general. All obtainable information points to a continuance of these conditions, indeed, a record—volume of business done in the year just closed, and the year commenced, and a still more satisfactory twelvemonth faces the business world. Industrial and manufacturing interests.

The best reports as to the year's results come from the West and Northwest, in wholesale and jobbing lines in large centers, and the spring business has been booked.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending Dec. 30 were 256, as against 264 last week, 229 last year, and 203 in 1907. In 1907, 220 in 1906 and 278 in 1905.—Bradstreet's.

AN ENOCH ARDEN AFFAIR.

Meets Wife After 32 Years—Both Remarried and Have Families.

Each having been informed and believing that the other was dead and having remarried, A. E. Mead of Brant township, Saginaw county, and his wife, who left him 32 years ago, have just met for the first time since their separation, although they have been living within twenty miles of each other for the last twenty-five years. She is living happily with her second husband in Owosso and he with his second wife on a farm in Brant township, and each have several children. Mr. and Mrs. Mead formerly lived at Ovid, where he was employed in a mill. Dissensions arose and one night Mrs. Mead left home, taking their baby daughter, Anna, with her. Mead made efforts to locate his wife, but failed, and finally drifted to California and from there to Oklahoma, where he finally settled in Minnesota and settling in Grant township. Meantime he had been told that his wife and child were dead and he remarried. For some time he has been working in the Owosso sugar factory. Recently Otto Keener came to the factory to repair the boilers. The latter knew Mead and his domestic troubles and incidentally said that his wife's name was Mead when he married her. He met at a meeting of Mead and his daughter, and by an unusual coincidence, it was now Mrs. Charles Herman, in view of the circumstances Mead decided to leave everything as it is.

Iron Journal: Last night the papers were signed which completed the organization of the Ironwood Publishing company of Ironwood. This company, which is capitalized at $12,000, the stock of which is all paid up, takes over the holdings of the Bryan Publishing company, which includes the Evening Journal and the weekly edition, the Iron-City Journal. C. L. Bunney, as president and general manager, will remain in charge and in the direction of the new company is given a vote of confidence for the success of the old company. The stock is subscribed by local citizens who see a great field of usefulness for the Journal and no expense will be spared to make the paper a proper representative of the busy and progressive community which it represents.

Pelonsky News: A nasty cutting affray occurred at Hogan Falls Friday afternoon, which nothing but good fortune and a heavy overcoat prevented being fatal. Ralph Dye, aged about thirty-five, went to the house of Lindsay-in-law, Newton Garrie, to enlist his services for cutting wood the next day. Garrie was not at home, but Ralph, Dye Junior, chief, Harry Dye, Paddock, aged about twenty, engaged in the cutting industry. Dye asked Paddock what he was doing there, and at the same time enquired why he, Paddock, could not help him in the wood operation. Paddock took umbrage at one or the other part of the question or its combined inference, and made for Dye with his open knife, inflicting five ugly threats, two in the forehead, two in the breast and one in the abdomen, but owing to the heavy overcoat worn by Dye, none of them were necessarily serious. There was no arrest made, as the interested parties dared the matter up, and Paddock agreed to go to work and pay for all Dye's doctor bills and other necessary expense, and in addition keep Dye's family supplied with fuel during the time he is not able

MONEY INSTITUTIONS COMBINE.

Morgan Engineers Record Merger of Three Trust Companies.

J. Pierpont Morgan, head of the money trust, accomplished another of his tremendous coups the other day, merging three New York trust companies into one of the greatest banking institutions in the country, a $100,000,000 assets concern, to be known as the Guaranty Trust Company. The companies concerned are the Morton Trust Company, the Fifth Avenue Trust Company and the Guaranty Trust Company.

While not so officially announced, this merger is currently reported to have been brought about by Mr. Morgan purchasing the stock interests of Thomas F. Ryan and the Mutual Life Insurance Company. Two months ago he purchased the holdings of the late E. H. Harriman in the Guaranty Trust Company, so that he already had control of the control initiation in this new consolidation.

The merger marks the following out of a policy outlined some time ago for the consolidation of many of the financial institutions of New York City and calls attention in the most forcible way to the dominant influence of the Morgan interests in the financial world. It marks the association by Mr. Morgan and his associates of two financial institutions at one time controlled by other powerful interests, for the Guaranty Trust Company was dominated by the late E. H. Harriman and the Morton Trust Company was the headquarters of Thomas F. Ryan.

CURB RAILROADS AND TRUSTS, URGES TAFT

President, in Message, Presents Plan of Railroad Regulation and Corporation Control.

CHECK ON SECURITY ISSUES.

Legislation Is Asked to Prevent Watering of Stocks and Other Kindred Evils.

WOULD RETAIN SHERMAN LAW.

Aims to Foster "Economizing" Features of Combinations and Bad "Monopolizing" Evils.

President Taft has sent to Congress his long delayed and much discussed message on interstate commerce and antitrust legislation.

In it he strikes at the existence of holding corporations by which major trusts control dry subsidiaries and at the watering of corporation stock.

To insure the more complete control of railroads by the government he demands the formation of a Court of Commerce, to consider five judges, having jurisdiction in part as a court of appeals from the ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The President dips into railway employes' affairs also, urging new features of the liability law.

State control of corporations is vigorously opposed by the President, who charges it with the responsibility for many corporation abuses, and he takes a firm stand for centralized power.

He demands that railroads be forbidden to cancel their competitors and would give the Interstate Commission revenue increases in power.

Declaring distinction between good and bad trusts to be impossible, the President says emphatically that if the trusts are to be kept within the law new legislation creating national corporations under charter is urgently needed. This, the main provision of the anti-trust section, was announced somewhat ago, as were many of the other terms of the message.

Such a course, the President points out, is not to afford the trust a refuge, as the Sherman law's repeal is not contemplated.

The proposed statute, according to the message, is not to be framed so as to permit the doing of the wrongs which it is the purpose of that the Sherman law to prevent, but only to foster a continuance and advance of the highest industrial efficiency with corresponding industrial advance.

The President also includes a vigorous protest against the attempt to prosecute of trusts will be continued unremittingly.

Personal Taft's Message.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Which is of supreme importance is that the business of the country should be set to doing what it can best do, namely, the work of the world, the production of the necessities and luxuries of life, the exchange of commodities and movement of food, fuel, and other products between the States, and the production of the revenue to the Government from the profits of business and from the income of its citizens, and the distribution of the revenue so raised among the various departments of the government for the payment of the expenses of government.

[illegible]

Would Prevent Evil Practices.

I believe these suggested amendments to and amendments to the interstate commerce act to be within the power of effective measures for securing the results aimed at by the Sherman law, namely, the suppression of practices and conditions inimical to the public interest, but which, in the absence of specific legislation, have not been regarded as illegal, and to supplement the Sherman law by such additional provisions as may be necessary to secure the end in view, namely, the suppression of such evils as have been developed in the course of the last twenty years, during which the Sherman law has been in force.

Federal Control Conclusions.

I recommend, therefore, that the National government be so provide that federal control may be established over such of the business of the country as may not now be subject to the interstate commerce clause of the constitution, and that the National government may exercise such control, directly or indirectly, as may be necessary in the public interest of such or portions or other parts of such business as may be found to be of such character as to require such control, and that the interstate commerce act applies.

[illegible]

Anti-Trust Law.

The business in the capital of a business, the business of production and efficiency of production and efficiency of production, and the business of the distribution of the product to the consumer.

The business of production entirely in the hands of a single person is a tendency to monopoly, and is to be avoided.

The union of the anti-trust law with the criminal law has led to confusion in the minds of the people between the business of production and efficiency of production and the business of monopoly and the business of the distribution of the product to the consumer.

The union which I wish is this: that the business of the Sherman law, namely, that declares of the Congress whether the business of production and distribution cannot be done by a single person or by a corporation, and if it be found a business of a character of the business which cannot be done by a single person or by a corporation, then the business of changing the character, organization and methods of business so as to remove the bars of the law under federal control and supervision, and authorizing it to do so, is the business of the Congress.

Many people confusing great business with great wealth, I believe that in some way or other a State should be authorized to charge a tax upon the business of production and distribution, but, however, we must distinguish between the business and the great wealth, which, in the case of a corporation, is represented by the stock and bonds of the corporation, and which, in the case of a natural person, represents the accumulation of the profits of business.

[illegible]

Federal Control Proposed.

Such a business law should be so supported, that by those who desire to do business with the Government, and who do their property subject to the Government, and who do their business subject to the Government, and who do their business subject to the Government, and who do their business

CASUAL OBSERVATIONS

Political and Otherwise—Gathered By the Wayside—Ideas, Big and Little.

The calm dignity and high conceptions of duty that characterized the federal judge, the cabinet minister and the insular governor manifests itself in the president. Notwithstanding the work of the muck rakers, the yellow newspapers and the ultra Roosevelt enthusiasts, Mr. Taft progresses irresistably toward success. Thorns are thrown in his pathway, but he brushes them aside; his acts are misrepresented but he calmly and confidently awaits ultimate dispassionate judgment. The Ballinger-Pinchot affair is being used to discredit him, but he knows the ground upon which he stands, and Ballinger will stay. Alger was driven from McKinley's cabinet by the yellow press, but Michigan led the Nation to final and complete vindication of the war secretary. Ballinger's record in matters of conservation has been officially investigated and found faultless. Notwithstanding the high attainments of Pinchot, the president could not retain him and his own self-respect at the same time. The president is on safe ground, and will emerge from the affray in sound condition.

We are not violating any rule of confidence in stating that the Honorable Pat Kelley asks for the SENTINEL'S support in his race for the governorship. Could not possibly do it, Pat. You are a good sort of a chap, and would not make a bad governor, but you abide too close to the dregs. Your cause is already waning; you are not in it, and we believe you know it.

Yes, we still have our eyes on Knowles; but the time for close action is yet a long way off. Knowles is made of the right kind of stuff to wear well. He will be the next senator from this district. He will sit in two sessions of the senate, and then—— Knowles does not require advising, but we are keeping our eye on him.

The trend of public sentiment toward Chase S. Osborn is steadily gaining force. The people admire his manliness, his frankness and his sincerity, and they recognize his ability. There is force in every word Osborn speaks, because he knows Michigan and loves it. There is logic in his utterances, because he is conscious of the political justice of his cause. He is invincible in his political faith, and he hails from a section that has bred and nurtured republicanism since republicanism's organization faced disaster. Chase S. Osborn stands four-square to every wind that blows. If he lives he will be the next governor of Michigan, and he will figure as one of the big state executives

Saved at Death's Door.

The door of death seemed ready to open for Murray W. Ayers, ex-Union Judge, N. Y., when his life was wonderfully saved. The Torrey Meetings.

R. A. Torrey, D. D., the well known evangelist, is holding a series of revival meetings at Petoskey, and his sermons are beginning to make impressions on many of the most case hardened hearts in the above city. Mr. Torrey speaks with a kind, tone of voice, while his bright, though tender blue eyes seem ever ready to beam forgiveness, (if they only could) on the frail and fallen.

He used for his text Isaiah 53 5, also Luke 7 37, and made a beautiful word picture of the broken alabaster box, when a mighty Spirit came and took possession of many people. There were 56 conversions in this one meeting. But they say sometimes "you must not count converts."

Jesus says there is joy in heaven over one; if He counts one, He counts 88. The writer could not count those at the altar, or after meeting the same evening, Friday, Jan. 14, owing to the church being so crowded. It is assumed that more than 600 people throng the church every night.

CAUGHT THE MOOD.

The Incident That Helped Verdi With His "Miserere."

Men of genius are conformably creatures of mood. Grief and adversity have often been a real help to their rather than a hindrance. Poe, it is said, produced "The Raven" while sitting at the bedside of his sleeping but dying wife. Many similar instances might be cited, but an anecdote of Verdi, told by Carlo Ceccarelli, will suffice.

On one occasion when Verdi was engaged on his well known opera, "Il Trovatore," he stopped short at the passage of the "Miserere," being at a loss to combine notes of sufficient and ness and pathos to express the grief of the prisoner, Manrico.

Sitting at his piano in the deep stillness of the winter night, his thoughts then wandered back to the stormy days of his youth, endeavoring to extract from the past a plaint, a groan, like it so which escaped from his breast, set on he saw himself forsaken by the world. All in vain!

One day at Milan he was unexpectedly called to the bedside of a dying friend, one of the few who had remained faithful to him in adversity and prosperity. Verdi at the sight of his dying friend felt a lump rise in his throat. He wanted to weep, but so intense was his grief that not a tear flowed to the relief of his anguish.

In an adjoining room stood a piano. Verdi, under one of those sudden impulses to which men of genius are sometimes subject, sat down at the instrument and there and then improvised the sublime "Miserere" of the "Trovatore." The melodious lad gives utterance to his grief.

QUEER JEWELRY.

Telegraph Wire Necklaces and Insulators as Earrings.

The aesthetic and decorative uses to which barbarians will turn objects which to civilized races are things of the broadest utility are amazingly illustrated by this "fashion note" from West Africa taken from an Italian newspaper:

In some tribes the officials of the German colony in Southwest Africa noticed that the telegraph wires and the accessories of the electrical plant disappeared as by magic immediately after they had been put up. The most diligent inquiries remained fruitless.

From other parts of the German possessions came reports of strange predictions for articles of German commerce, as, for example, rubber heels, garters, buckles, and so forth, things which the natives of those countries do not generally use.

The governor of the colony gave an entertainment one year in honor of the emperor's birthday and invited the chiefs of the different tribes to it. What was his surprise when he saw three native gentlemen appear with his stolen telegraph wires twisted round their limestone necks. The lighter the dignity the more rings of the wire were round the neck.

Beauties were soon started in the outlying villages, and it came to light that the white china insulators of the telegraph poles had become earrings. A young lady of the highest distinction in native society wore a rubber heel hanging from her nose, and a young man who was a well known dandy wore dangling from his ears a pair of beautiful pink silk garters.

COLOSSUS OF RHODES.

One of the Ancient Seven Wonders of the World.

The nucleus succeeded in making that alloy of copper with it to known as bronze. Among the seven wonders of the world was the famous statue, wholly made of bronze, historically known as the Colossus of Rhodes. It represented Phoebus, the national deity of the Rhodians. It was begun by Chares, a pupil of Lysippus, the sculptor, and was completed by Laches 288 B. C. The popular belief is that it stood astride the harbor of Rhodes; that it was 105 feet high and that ships could entry sail between its legs.

Pliny said that few men could clasp its thumb. It was cast on metal plates afterward joined together, and this process occupied twelve years. In the interior was a great staircase reaching into its head, and in a great mirror suspended to its neck were reflected the coast of Syria, and the ships sailing to Egypt.

After it had stood for sixty-four years this colossus was overthrown by an earthquake, and the enormous mass of the statue for 923 years—that is, until A. D. 672—when they were sold by the Saracens to a dealer. The original cost was 300 talents—about $300,000—and it is not too much to say that a similar image might be constructed now in one-fourth of the time and at one-third of the original cost. Rhodes, by the way, may have had enormous on the brain, for Pliny relates that the port was adorned with 1,000 colossal statues of the sun.

LONDON THEATERS.

The Ordeal of "Getting Past the Aged Ticket Taker.

The first diff cence I always find between going to a theater in London and in New York is that in New York the man who is a paid fixer is sent to mide to feel that he is a patron of the house, while in London he is treated by the staff of the theater not exactly as an intruder, but as a necessary evil. They appreciate that an audience is a necessary evil, but sooner than have one have we odd almost prefer to close the house.

In London for the most importantly starlight output of ticket taker an old gentleman of eighty is always employed. You think this is accident, but it is not. Old age naturally suggests failing eyesight, and who can be away your will. Long in the fever while he examines your ticket and a coarse himself dim it is not a laundry I dit or a motor has recently you attribute the delay to his old eyes. But in dot sitting you he has a motive. Standing at his elbow, scowling darkly, there always is another man, apparently a plain clothes cop from Scotland Yard, unconvincingly disguised in evening dress. And while the aged ticker taker pretends to scrutinize your ticket the lookout man scans you. You cannot escape his eye. His scowl means, Mr. Innocent, no matter how reckless, can hope to pass that man with a concealed bag of revolver or wearing a white tie with a dinner coat—Outlook.

A Soldier's Begging.

We were visiting at Sandringham Sir Evelyn Wood, who is very deaf, crept up to me as he could to the musicians, and in one of the pauses he said to me, "Are you fond of music?" I answered, "Yes." "Do you play anything?" said the old hero. "Well," he went on, "I am so fond of it that, would you believe it, I began at the scales at twenty-four. Yes, one day my sister came up and put her hand on my shoulder and said, 'Dear boy, you had better give that up,' and so I did." He also told me that he began life as a sailor, then went to the bar and finally entered the army. The only profession he had not tried was the church, and his sons seem to have had enough of that, as they do not know what church to choose.—"Life of Sir William Broadbent."

Bird's Sense of Direction.

The migratory instinct in birds is combined with another equally mysterious, that of the sense of direction. A gentleman engaged in scientific research work for the library board on the local government steamboat Gold Seeker recorded a very interesting observation he made of this characteristic of the migratory bird life. An oriole catcher that was being lighted by a lead wind in its eastern flight across the North sea toward the continental shores alighted on the boat. It took kindly to the attention paid to it so long as the boat kept its easterly course, but when the course of the boat was altered a few points to the northward the bird immediately showed all signs of uneasiness and after an apparent consideration of its bearings flew into the darkness of the night on its eastward course. The attention to the bird's course was revealed to those who were watching the bird only when the compass was examined.—Scotsman.

Norway's Many Meals.

Among the well to do in Norway the frequency of meals and lighter refreshments is something startling. At least to the average American, breakfast at 6, dinner at 9, coffee at 3:30, regular tea, with many dishes, in English style, at 6:30, supper at 9, and at 11 nature is finally fortified with further nutriment for the long, radiant night. These long, radiant nights, by the way, are a constant source of wonder to us, and encourage many forms of dissipation and immorality, such as the consumption of liquor at the long winter brings in its train a certain sordid degeneration, both mental and physical.—Caroline Thurber in Century.

The Falling Branch.

In the grounds of Dalhousie castle, Scotland, there is a famous specimen of the sympathy of the vegetable world with human death. It was evidently bestowed in the belief that a branch always fell from the oak when a member of the family died. Apparently the fall of the original twenty in the eighteenth century did not break the sympathy, for a new one sprang from the old root, and it is upon record that as lately as 1874 an aged branch, being a branch fell from old forester, seeing a branch fall from the oak on a still day, cried, "The laird's dead noo!" News of the eleventh Earl of Dalhousie's death soon followed.

A PATRONS' EXCHANGE
Why Co-operation In Connecticut is Likely to Succeed.
Numbers Get Quotations From the Exchange and Keep Prices and Arrangements to Themselves—This Is Said to Be the Secret of Successful Co-operative Buying Farmers' Supplies.
As to co-operation, there is no state organization for this purpose, but fifty-four million dollars is reported in co-operative trade for the past year. Purchase for relief associations carry grangemen's insurance at a saving of two-thirds rate and of the old line companies. The grange is recognized as an important factor in legislation. The grange has been instrumental in securing the passage of laws affording the burden of construction of highways so that the poorer inland towns are relieved largely of the cost of the same. The city summer resorts now receive more aid from the state than towns of a higher assessment. About $700 miles of macadam highways have been constructed, and the state is expending $1,000,000 a year of state funds. There are altogether about 10,000 miles of improved roads in the state. It costs about $7,000,000 a year to maintain the state militia in the state. It costs about $7,000,000 a year to maintain the state militia. Ten years ago the state was worse exploited at the last session of the legislature. Ten years ago the state was in the hands of corporations. Now the state is directed by the people.

Over Ninety Thousand Members Enrolled—Influential In Legislation.
The influence of the grange in New York state was recognized. The halls have been dedicated this year, costing over $50,000. The grange is demanding cleaner fairs, and the fair associations are recognizing the influence of the grange. A grange hall has been erected as part of one of the new buildings at the state fair grounds. Addresses are given here on one day of the fair.

NEW NATIONAL LECTURER.
Oliver Wilson, Master Illinois State Grange, Chosen to High Office.
Oliver Wilson of Peoria, master of the Illinois state grange, Patrons of Husbandry, and recently chosen lecturer of the national grange, was born in Delaware county, O. In the year 1833. His ancestors were Welsh and Scotch.
He first became a member of the grange in 1872 at a time when the distinction of being the youngest charter member of Magnolia grange. His capabilities did not go unnoticed by his fellow members, and to show their appreciation of his rare attainments they elected him master of the Illinois state grange some fourteen years ago, which exalted position he has held with great credit to himself as well as the Order ever since. Two measures which have been earnestly advocated by the grange have been enacted into law in Illinois—the two cent passenger railroad rate and local option. Master Wilson believes that no injustice has been done the railway companies by the two cent rate passenger bill, as the very substantial increase in travel and the doing away with free passes will compensate for the reduction. In the history of the legislature Mr. Wilson appeared before the committee on ways and means and charges, presented the claims of the grange and succeeded in a most respectful hearing. This measure became a law, giving the farmer the right to express his opinion at the ballot box as to whether the legislated saloon shall exist or not.
Master Wilson believes that the present complicated primary law is a step backward and that it does not meet the requirements of the people. He believes that an appeal should be made to the legislature to repeal the present law and that a direct primary law be enacted giving to the people the right to express their preference regarding nomination for all offices without regard to party affiliations.
Mr. Wilson feels the pressing demand for the passing of a judicious parcels post law. He believes that the government cannot afford to discriminate against her own citizens in favor of big foreign nations.
Master Wilson urges that the grange should with renewed energy see every legitimate means within its power to secure a deep waterway connecting the gulf of Mexico with the great lakes and the lakes with the Atlantic ocean.

Gas and Dreamers.
Mr. Newrich, the multimillionaire, was furnishing the library of his magnificent mansion. "Let me see," he mused. "You've got the order for that $5,000 edition de luxe of Dickens bound in leather?"
"Yes, sir," replied the bookseller.
"And the $10,000 set of Shakespeare?"
"Yes, sir."
"And the standard authors bound in calf—Thackeray, Scott, Washington Irving, Cooper and all them there other fellers?"
"Yes, sir; I have a memorandum of the entire list."
"Well, sir, that's off my mind," said Mr. Newrich of Fleitsburg, with a sigh of relief. "Now, what I want is something to read. Say, have you got that new set of Old Sleuth?"—New York Times.

A Hero.
Tommy's mother and uncle him a book of travel and adventure. He cut in the land to play with his sister. "Take care of my lady now, Tommy, and don't let anything hurt her. Remember you're carrying the injection." Presently screams of anguish from lady sent the distracted parent into the nursery. "What's the poodle-ses' mater, Tommy, what has happened to the lady?" said she, trying to soothe the wailing infant.
"Nothing was happening! I'm sitting on top of his head, and I killed it with the shovel," was the proud reply.—Lippincott's.

"Dama, come, come!" Mr. Dallas danced at this scene between two intertwiled women and, when and yet gifted with the self-restraint of experience, he knew that the Dallas eyes at my table. There is a stranger, or shall I say a friend, present?"

"Say a friend," observed Etwald, calmly, "although I am about to say that which may cause these two young ambitious to look upon me as an enemy."

"Why do you mean?" asked Marjorie, turning the still frowning face towards him strange and anxious eyes.

"What I say is Mr. Aylmer! Yes—admirer Miss Dallas!"

"Why do you name him the position? Yes, I admire Miss Dallas!"

"And you, Mr. Bailey, I can tell from your attitude, from your look, you love Miss Dallas!"

David was taken aback by this strange explanation.

"Yes, I—I do love Miss Dallas."

Jen seemed to feel the cold world, with a cold smile. "Now it is strange—very!"

"It is strange that a lady's name should be thus mentioned," said Jen, annoyed at the tone of the conversation; "yet, if it pleases you—"

"One moment, Major. I wish my friends to understand my position. I am, as you have hinted, there went here the dark-eyed lady—"Miss Dallas!"

"Why do you speak of her?" asked Major Blake, sharply, David looked inwardly at Etwald.

"Because I love her!"

The two young men burst out simultaneously with the speech in issues Jen, Marjorie looked, and stared at Etwald as at some strange animal. That this elderly man—Etwald was nothing between thirty and forty, but that looked elderly in their boys of twenty-five—should dare to love Miss Dallas was a thing unheard of. She so young, so beautiful, he so number, pale, so unknown with intellectual visible, with a mysterious past, a doubtful present, and a problematic future. Marjorie and David divided the consciousness the color by their passion for the same woman, and, dazzled in a twinkling of rage and contempt against the intruder, who dared to make a third rival. It is their scarcity of intellect, "I looked at Etwald, they looked at one another, and finally both began to laugh. Jen looked at the faces of their mirth, but Etwald, in resolve the contemptuous, in his calm, cold, cynical smile waiting for further developments.

"Oh, it is too absurd!" said Marjorie, resuming his seat.

Again David noted that the tigerish light leaped up in the eyes of Etwald, but he had sufficient of the self-control to refrain from a look of courteous curiosity. He carefully handled and examined the instrument of death.

It was a little over a foot long, of a hard-looking green wood; the handle of gold was entirely moulded in a beautiful fashion round the turquoise stones, and these, of all hues from green to the jacket of dusky, were enfolded like lumps of quartz in gold. Round the handle was a little inscription there fingered a rich and heavy perfume, sickly and sensuous.

"See here!" said Jen, pressing, or rather squeezing the handle. "I lights on my snip open this and the sting of the scorpion leaps out!" When Jen Etwald glanced at the end of the wood and saw a tiny needle or hook peak itself out. When Jen relaxed his pressure on the handle, the little instrument slipped back and disappeared instantly.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR

LOSS OF SCHOONER BUCKLEY

Particulars of the Loss of the Vessel Owned and Commanded by Capt. Ira Morehouse.

The editor in receipt of a letter from Capt. Ira Morehouse, formerly of this place, in which he encloses the following clipping from a New York paper, concerning the recent loss of the schooner Abel C. Buckley, spoken of in these columns last week:

The story of a thrilling rescue during a storm at sea of six men from a waterlogged schooner, which was sinking rapidly, was brought to this port yesterday morning when the British steamship "Hockley," Captain William Daly, docked at the wharf of the Delaware River Steel Company, foot of Wilson street.

It was one of those tales of the sea which brings vividly to the mind of the "landlubber," the dangers which at all times confront the men who follow the water for a livelihood; of a tiny craft being buffetted about at the mercy of a storm which showed no abatement, and of a rescue of men from a watery grave at a time when all hope had been given up and final prayers had been said. And then of the providential appearance of a steamer, the lowering of boats and after a battle with the sea, taking off the unfortunates and landing them safe and sound in the nearest port.

Such is the story of the rescue of Captain A. H. Morehouse, of Bangor, Me., and his crew of five men of the old two-mast schooner "Abel C. Buckley," whose home port was Bangor, but which sailed from the port of New York to southern ports. Forty years ago the "Buckley" when launched at a Maine shipyard, was one of the staunchest boats of her size afloat. And according to her gallant skipper, Captain Morehouse, the manner in which she withstood the elements from December 26 to January 1, clearly demonstrated that she was a credit to her makers. The accident only she sprung a leak and was fast sinking when the "Hockley" bore down upon her and took off the exhausted members of her crew.

And in connection with the statement that the rescue occurred off Providence, it was a most marvelous one. Continued that it was this and nothing else. It was due to Captain Daly having decided to go out of the course that he in the rescue of the "Buckley's" crew.

THE CAPTAIN'S STORY.

In speaking of his thrilling experience, Captain Morehouse, in conversation with a reporter of The Morning Herald, said, "We sailed, light, from New York on Christmas day for Norfolk, Va., to take on a cargo of lumber. The second day out we ran into the storm and from that time until the "Hockley" bore in sight, we had an experience from which crews of much larger vessels ever escape to tell about.

"Almost as soon as we got out we ran into sleets and we were driven along at express like speed ahead of the wind. On the morning of January 1, New Year's day, and the eve of my birthday, we were about exhausted and though we had worked constantly at the pumps we could do nothing to keep the water from flowing into the hold through the leaks the schooner had sprung. I had my crew had given up all hope of rescue for we were so far out of the course of all vessels, and I had frequently prayed, when we saw a steamship bearing down upon us. At the time high seas were running and we realized that any rescue would be hazardous."

THE RESCUE.

From then, the story is best told by the mate and the seamen of the "Hockley." It appears that Captain Daly, who sailed from the port of Sagunto, Spain, with a cargo of ore, ran into bad weather and for twenty-three days, from December 5, experienced what he terms the worst conditions since he has been sailing the seas. He finally concluded to take a course set down reversed by any vessels and head off eastwardly off Hatteras. About 7 o'clock on the morning of New Year's day, his lookout reported to him that a steamer was ahead and when the glass was brought into use, it was discovered to be at the mercy of the waves, while from the top of the foremast waved the American flag—upside down—the signal of distress.

Captain Daly at once gave orders to bear down on the schooner. Arriving within hailing distance, the order was given to lower the lifeboat but this was smashed into bits against the side of the ship. The "jolly" or dingy was then lowered and after two hours' work, the mate of the Brooklyn and three seamen succeeded in taking off Captain Morehouse and his crew of five men. In speaking of the saving of his and his men's lives, Captain Morehouse presented the men of the "Brooklyn" with his pet Britishe dog—he having lost all his belongings.

One article which Captain Morehouse saved and which he carefully protected was a photograph of his wife and baby. He also saved his barometer and log-book. The crew of the "Hockley" was put ashore at Bermuda and sailed from there to New York. Captain Morehouse left Chester yesterday for New York, from where he will go to his home in Bangor, Me., today.

Northern Michigan

Hoyne City is suffering from a shortage of coal for her various industries and the hotel can't stove.

Fred F. Hotchkiss, of Hoyne Falls, has been chosen as a director of the Western Michigan Development Bureau from this county to succeed Hon. J. M. Morris. Mr. Hotchkiss is one of the most hustling young men in the county and will make a working director.

A Traverse City man writes that squals are dying by the hundreds on account of the deep snow covering the seeds upon which they subsist. It is suggested that farmers would do well to feed these birds as they consume great quantities of insects and weed seeds, and thus prove themselves good friends to the agriculturist.

Cadillac recently inaugurated a war on rats, offering a bounty of five cents per head. One thousand, five hundred and thirteen rats have so far departed this life and the rat hunters have $76.75 to their credit. Cadillac has long had the when the slogan fiad was on, adopted "The City of Quality" for its placement, and the reader can readily see where the rat was with such a name as that to its prejudice whatever the quality of the rat might be.

The Western Michigan Development Bureau is anxious to secure information regarding the cost of getting two acre apple orchards into bearing and is desirous that the fruit growers of Western Michigan furnish it with the facts. It is seeking information bearing upon the cost of setting the orchard and of keeping it up until the trees begin to bear upon commercial scale. The more in detail the information, the more satisfactory it will be. Address, Development Bureau, 404 State Bank Building, Traverse City, Michigan.

Traverse City Eagle: The Charlevoix fishermen who were cited to appear in Judge F. O. Wickham's court at Frankfort on Tuesday on charges of having fished during the closed season, changed their plea from not guilty to guilty through their attorney when the case was called. John Wideman and E. J. Wideman were assessed a fine of $75 and $54.52 costs each, while C. E. Anderson was given the same amount in line with costs amounting to $36.02. At last accounts the men were engaged in a skirmish for the funds with which to liquidate. There cases were brought against the men by Deputy G. Alex Smith of this city on evidence secured by himself and other deputies, C. K. Hoyt and C. N. Smith. Prosecutor Paul of Benzie county conducted the case for the state, and Attorney Ware appeared for the defendants.

A Mancelona special says: Joseph Mannon, arrested last night for beating his wife, was sentenced to serve 90 days in the Detroit house of correction today. Mannon, it is claimed, became angry because his wife went to lodge last night and invaded the sacred precincts of the lodge room after her. On the way home he is said to have struck his wife and they had arrived home, Marshal George White, who had followed them, saw him beating his wife, and arrested him. Mrs. Mannon died some months ago from Potokey and opened up a candy kitchen, at which she was doing very nicely. Mannon later joined her, and it is said abused her frequently. She claims to the officers that she would have complained of the treatment before, but that her husband threatened to do her further bodily harm if she did. [Seven] years ago there was a small grocery store in Charlevoix, coming here from Petoskey, returning there after establishing a reputation here as a dead-beat.]

Cadillac News and Express: Resemed to be dissatisfied with conditions, did one of our farmer friends who was heard to refer to money matters in one of our city banks Saturday. If the present situation does not satisfy him how would the farmer express himself if he were paying thirty cents per dozen for eggs, thirty-five cents per pound for butter, from twelve to thirty cents per pound for meat, and proportionally for most other provisions with the exception of potatoes? But the fact that potatoes are way down in price, and are our principal cash crop, probably gives some reason for the feeling among the farmers of this vicinity that the situation lacks quite a little of being as satisfactory as it should be. Not on a good many tables this winter potatoes will be the persistent and principal dish and the fact that he has contributed to making conditions in the home less burdensome than they might have been should be a further element of satisfaction to the potato producer. And then it seems to be certain that the enormous quantity of potatoes that will be consumed because of the high price of other food products must give northern Michigan's important crop a fair increase in value before the springtime comes.

ISLAND COMES AND GOES.

Rises in August and Disappears Regularly in February.

One of Michigan's unsolved mysteries is the island that every summer comes to the surface of Lake Orion and every winter goes back again to the depths from whence it arose.

Its periods of appearance and disappearance are nearly regular. It comes to the surface about the middle of August and goes down again about Feb. 15. What causes it to act thus strangely is a conundrum that none has been able to solve, but to keep it above water of compel it to remain in the depths have been alike without results.

On one occasion a number of farmers and teamsters resolved to put the island out of moving business. In their efforts to do so they hauled many loads of stone and deposited them on it during the early part of winter, believing that when it went down in February it would go down for good, weighted as it was with the stones. But the following August saw it bob up serenely from below—minus its load of stones.

At another time an effort was made to keep it on the surface, and it was claimed to the surrounding country with heavy log chains. When the time for departure came it departed and the log chains departed with it. The log chains were never recovered.

The island is composed of soft mud and rushes, and there are some skeptical souls who attribute its formation and appearance and disappearance to the gathering of vegetation in one spot by the currents of the lake and its subsequent decay.—Boston Herald.

"Window Leaves."

In South Africa Dr. H. Marloth has covered six species of plants possessing what are styled "window leaves." They are all stemless succulents, and the egg shaped leaves are imbedded in the ground, only the upper ends making visible. This visible part of the leaves is flat or convex on the surface and colorless, so that the light can penetrate it and reach the interior of the leaf below, which is green on the inside. With the exception of the plant apex, no part of the leaf is permeable to the light, being surrounded by the soil in which it is buried. The first of these plants discovered is a species of bulbine.—London Graphic.

Both Rather Flippant.

There is a curious parallelism between two stories told respectively of the late Mr. Spurgeon and of Dean Swift.

Mr. Spurgeon on hearing of the destruction wrought by an earthquake in Essex merely remarked, "I am glad to hear that my county is moving at last."

The dean of St. Patrick's, Dublin, was watching with a friend the roof of a building on which several men were at work fixing slates. Suddenly the men vanished. Thereupon the dean turned to his companion and said, "I like to see a man go quickly through his work."

Alaska gave us $19,000,000 worth of gold in 1908. But what of it when New York gave $23,000,000 worth of potatoes and Vermont $18,000,000 worth of hay?

SERMON FROM SHAKESPEARE

(Copr. 1909 by Bradley-Garretson Co. Ltd.)

O war, thou son of hell,
Whom even the devil should call father!
Henry VI, Part II, Act V, Sc 2.

A great general of the American Civil War forcibly remarked, "War is hell." He knew from experience the evils of war, the sufferings endured, the sorrow left in its wake, the permanent injury done the participe or nations engaged. His expression was not strikingly original. Shakespeare three hundred years ago formulated the same sentiment in almost the same words. It is true that it is not Shakespeare, but one of his creations who speaks of war as the son of hell, but so often do passages merely condemning war appear in his dramas that it can be taken for granted that Shakespeare himself is here speaking.

There is no present day subject that more demands the thoughtful consideration of the patriot than that of "confounding, hateful, and destructive war." As the nineteenth century closed it was hoped that the time was drawing nigh when men would convert their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. Peace conferences met, emperors and president talked universal peace, but while the echo of the peace orations was still in the air the two most highly civilized nations found themselves engaged in war—the United States with Spain and Great Britain with the Boers. Scarcely had the sounds of the "devilish cannon" of these powers died away when Russia and Japan were at each other's throats. To all of these nations war proved to be hell. It destroyed hoards, it filled the workhouses, it drove thousands into exile, it vastly increased the burdens of the toilers. The suffering caused, the losses endured should have turned men's hearts to peace. Instead of this the dogs of war are abroad. Never before had militarism such a grip on the nations. Never in an armed camp Japan is ready to do battle with any power that challenges her, and even China is waking from her sleep of twenty centuries and more and her cities are busy with preparations for war. The shipyards of the civilized powers are turning out monster battleships. The inventive geniuses of the race are devoting their time to producing new, more and more effective guns. In Europe and America and Japan during experimenters are striving to conquer the air, mainly in the interests of war. Where will it end? Must the nations pass in one bloody last battle before worldwide peace shall be declared?

War is the child of selfishness and greed. It is brought about largely by men who will never be targets for bullets. Calmly they sit on their thrones or in their offices and stir up strife that is likely "to lay the sunniest fields of earth waste with the blood of blood." If the politicians were placed at the head of the armies in conflict, or on board of the battleships in a death grapple, there would be less talk of war, less building of Dreadnoughts. Were they brought into the presence of battle they would "put armor on their ears and on their eyes" that they might not see the monster they had conjured up.

Blood will have blood! One war is but the breeder of another. Russia failed in her purpose against Japan. The Russians agreed to, what was to them, a humiliating peace. They did not the disgrace until they have wiped it out or suffered more in another war. They are but biding their time. If France had the strength she would gladly precipitate a war with Germany on account of past defeats.

Scholars and statesmen have met together with the hope of establishing peace among the so-called Christian powers. Their efforts have been in vain. War, that son of hell, is still abroad. In spite of mothers' tears and prayers, in spite of the intellectual outpourings of the pulpit, platform and the press, the powers are ready, apparently eager, to let slip the dogs of war, to let loose the hounds of hell to their sensed? Their people are groaning under a burden of taxation, their lives are fleeting in feverish hands to begin life under more favorable conditions. They care not. Their battle strength must be maintained, though their people starve. Their excuse is that in order to maintain peace they must be ready for war. Would it not be fitting that these rulers, so anxious to maintain peace that they pour out treasure like water and drain men from productive industries to battlefields and barracks, should get together and devise ways and means of maintaining peace without burdening their subjects to the breaking point and multiplying engines of war? If they could only fully realize the awful effects of war, realize them as Shakespeare realized them, they would bring about speedily conditions of peace.

There is a fallacy that war is necessary for giving a noble character. Man has nature to battle with. His character can be greatly moulded by building great rivers, constructing great canals, utilizing railways across continents and through mountain passes. The energy put forth, the intellect exercised in such undertakings enrich the nation. The millions of money and the thousands of lives sacrificed in war are but an offering to appease the god of insatiable lust of the nations, which Shakespeare has appropriately termed the "son of hell."

Trying to succeed in business without advertising is like the case of the man who, to save the cost of a watchman, placed his wife and stone attempted to keep house and raise a family alone. It cost him more money for dower bills and funeral expenses in a year than he gave his wife in a lifetime.

When advertising is divorced, business success becomes the rare exception, not the rule.

—Michigan railroads have taken an important action to draw homeseekers to Michigan and will co-operate with the western and eastern Michigan development bureaus and compete with far western sections in drawing attention to the state's agricultural advantages. The Michigan Passenger association has voted to meet the railroads each month, from March to December for the sale of low rate round trip tickets to all points in developing agricultural sections of the states. The rates and dates and attractions of the state will be liberally advertised. The rates will be in force at all Michigan gateways, at Chicago, South Bend, Toledo and other points, and it is assured that non-setting lines will make corresponding rates that will extend the homeseekers low rate privileges over a wide range of territory.

BOUGHT A FARM

Darwin F. Meech Acquires Ownership of the Geo. Anderson Farm.

Don't think for a minute that because "Dar" Meech failed to land the postoffice job that he is going about with a long face.

Negotitions have been in progress the past week that culminated in the purchase, last Saturday, by Mr. Meech, of the Geo. Anderson 100 acre farm in Marion, four miles south of this city.

The Anderson farm is known far and wide as one of the best fruit farms in the county. It has 1200 thrifty trees over ten years old, which includes a cherry orchard that yielded something over $300 last season. The farm is in an excellent state of cultivation and has good buildings.

Mr Meech will devote all his time to the farm, giving the orchards special care and attention along lines that have been so thoroughly exploited during the past year. What Dar does not know about horticulture or pomology "that" does—and between the two we may expect to see a big lay out from the Meech farm at the next West Michigan Development Bureau exhibit.

Dar is liked not all. For several years D. F. Meech has enjoyed an enviable reputation as a chicken fancier, and at his house in this city he has some of the finest bred birds in the county. On the farm he will increase the chicken business, and make it second only to that of fruit culture.

That the venture will be success no there is no doubt whatever.

A Snap Judgment.

We clip the following extract from the Manistee Republic:

"Judge F. W. Mayne, of this judicial district, gave a lecture in the Congregational church Monday evening on the subject of "The law and the law breaker," before a good sized audience. The principal part of his discourse was devoted to the pet fad of probation, which is all right so far as the first offense of youthful offenders is concerned, but all wrong when he extends clemency to notorious violators of the law. The judge stated that last year more cases in the district during the same year than for the five years previous, and this fact takes with him all credit in that he tried his prohibition plan on one fourth of the population. Probation ought to be evidence sufficient that his system is not a perfect success."

Manifestly the editor has given the judge's remarks a wrong analysis. He did not say, we venture, that one fourth of his probation cases had proven abortive.

The law gives the judge discretionary power in the matter of probation, and it is clearly the intent of the law that the power, which the Herald is pleased to characterize as the judge's "fad," shall be exercised on the side of mercy.

This is an age of reform along the line indicated. Even prison management is gradually coming of the strict methods of the past, which extin guished many a slumbering spark of good in the man, in the practice of a false theory of discipline.

"The quality of mercy is not strained.
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven upon the place beneath:
It blesseth him that gives and him that takes Tis mightiest in the mightiest."

It is better to err thrice on the side of mercy than to once destroy a lingering hope of reform by a too literal interpretation of the "demands of justice."

It is too soon yet to pass upon there formatory effects of Judge Mayne's probationary "fad." We believe the Judge is right.

FARMER'S INSTITUTE

This Week's Gathering a Record-Breaker—Large Attendance and Intense Interest.

A round-up Farmer's Institute held in this city Monday and Tuesday of this week made manifest the glittering fact that the farmers of Charlevoix county are "up and coming." The Institute was a record breaker in both attendance, scope of discussion and interest.

The record of attendance at previous institutes was 300. There were 600 farmers present at the gathering last week, and never before was there so deep interest taken in matters of agricultural and horticultural matters as was demonstrated at every session.

Jason Woodman, of Paw Paw, was conductor of the Institute, and there were present, as participator and instructor, A. I. Hopkins, of Bear Lake, and J. F. Edmonds, of Hastings, who made a very instructive talk Tuesday morning on "The Dairy Barn and the Silo." Mr. Woodman talked interestingly about potato culture, and at all the sessions there were general discussions on subjects of deep interest to farmers of this section.

The Woman's Congress met Monday afternoon at VanDyke Hall, with Mrs. E. J. Dupont, of Lansing, in conference and Mrs. Josephine Logan as chairman.

The fact that the women of the farms are effective co-workers with the "finds of creation" in the successful production of the farmer's work was never more clearly demonstrated than at this meeting. The truth is, we are apt to lose sight of the fact that knowledge, industry and prudence inside the farmhouse is as important as are same practices at the barn or in the field. The program covered a variety of subjects within the realm over which the good farmer's wife presides.

The Institute brought out the fact that an agricultural revival is in progress in this section, as a direct result of the recent development agitation.

The old officers were re-elected—Jay Morse, president, and John A. Newville, secretary.

It Seems There are Oliers.

Traverse City Eagle: One topic of conversation in political circles is what shall be done with the appointment for master at the expiration of the term of the present incumbent. It is openly said that Congressman Dodds has promised to pass the plum over to another man instead of Mr. Carver, because of the former's activity in supporting the 31st. Dodds has signified a fond candidate for the seat in the lower house of congress. While this report has not been verified by the Eagle it is to be seen that there is an unusual stir in certain factions, so that there may be a grain of truth in what we hear.

Other things being equal, Traverse City republicans should be credited for their loyalty to their fellow citizen. It is a fact that at the last election the ballots for the man who defeated their favorite for the nomination, which was taken from good and faithful citizens, taking off the state, if any intended, for having opposed Dodds in the election, were not the safe securities in a starlike spot. This is the view of a horse in yet where the front end of the middle comes, and the attack therefore makes a vast deal of trouble where every one rides horseback. A majority of the Brazilian horses and nearly all the cows are bitten by these jiggues.

"Verily, verily, the pests are mostly confined to the forest country. They are comparatively little trouble in cities and villages, though the construction of houses makes it impossible to keep them out. In cities lines are extensively used for roofs and in the country palm leaf thatching, and all kinds of bats come and go at pleasure. One rarely goes to sleep without from one to a dozen flying about the room. They are mostly all surgeons and are welcome because they catch insects. They all look so much alike that one does not know which to attack.

"How the genuine vampires ended scientific study of them is a mystery. The species was not positively identified until the visit of Darwin in the Beagle. It was in the seventies, I think, and there is not at the present day, as far as I can learn, a single well authenticated case recorded in the interior of the continent. BLOODSUCKING BATS

These Pests Are Plentiful In the Forests of Brazil.

THEY ARE TRUE VAMPIRES.

But Cattle and Horses Are Their Chief Victims, Which They Suffer in Numbers—Their Chisel-like Teeth and Peculiar Interior Anatomy.

Half a dozen of us had been telling what we thought we knew about bloodsucking bats, but our conversation had developed only an astonishing amount of misinformation and irreconcilable differences. So we called in the doctor who had lived some years in Brazil and asked him to confout our tangled ideas.

"I'm not surprised at your confusion," he began, "for at one time or another I have believed three everything your questions would suggest. When I was a schoolboy the vampire was a bat as large as a crow, had a horn on its nose and was described as sitting on his victim's feet, fanning him with his wings while he worked his sucking apparatus, and so much a bat, but when it was proved that it was a fruit eater many of us dropped the whole bat legend along with the vampire. There are bats that suck blood, however—millions of them.

"I spent a year in Spanish conquistadors found proof of the existence of the great tees, which looked as if the skin had been deliberately shaved off, just deep enough to come blood, but they never caught one and naturally laid the blame to the biggest ones they found, which are nearly all vegetarians. The real thing is a small reddish brown creature closely resembling bats of the same color caught here not infrequently.

"The naturalist tools, however, some surprising differences. They have no teeth for any purpose save for thrusting the skin—not enough for the blood to flow freely, but just sufficient to enable them to draw it by suction. The wound rarely bleeds after they leave it. This preparation is done with a pair of chisel-like teeth, sharp as a knife. Their interior anatomy differs from other animals as well as their teeth. All the other animals, so far as I know, have a stomach and necessary organs for converting food into blood. The true vampire has only an elongated sacklike intestine for the storage of the blood taken from the victim, its digestion till it is taken up into the circulatory system. With neither teeth nor stomach, it has no alternative, it must find nourishment ready made.

"Certainly the vampire may not account for one very strange thing about its selection of victims. Cattle and horses are the chief ones. Not one human being in a hundred entirely escapes their teeth. Not half the people who live among them all their lives escape them in three years. But if one is a family, for instance, just suits them they'll leave that person to stay out of the house, and no matter how carefully he may be covered or screened they will find their particular repast.

"The stories of their bleeding people chiefly relied by the Eagle it is to be seen that there is an unusual stir in certain factions, so that there may be a grain of truth in what we hear.

On the day after the Manor House party, Isabella was sitting in the drawing-room with a book open on her lap and Dido studiously avoiding her. Mrs. Dallas in the cool depths of the drawing-room was indulging in an afternoon siesta. The sunlight poured down in the silent street, and drew forth the perfumes from the flower beds, and made the earth languorous with heat. In the garden all was cool and restful. The shrubs, the flowers, the birds, the fish, and pleasing, plump, little Dido herself, looked beautiful and her whole character was reshaped, positive, subtle, intuitive, and full of rude, swift, intense knowledge. Dido round her stately head, gleaming in the sunlight, the same expression tragical bird anxious to our northern climes. Dido mourning and her lover silent.

It was Dido who spoke first. She noticed that the book of her mistress commonly strayed in the direction of Mauritius, and with the patience of a digger of diamonds, she guessed that the girl's thoughts were fixed upon Maurice. At once she spoke regretfully, and in her sweetness and grace dodged, which, however, coming from Dido's mouth, lacked all its force with mortimer.

"Also, mamzelle, said she, in deep guttural tones, 'you think on dat yaller-boy' name?"

"Maurice?" Yes, I'm thinking about him; and you know it."

Dido's front black eyes flashed out a gleam of rage, and she—poor Dido—knew that mamzelle's partiality toward white twinkles stemmed in another direction. At all events she interpreted the woman's speech with an imperious gesture.

"No more of dat, Dido. I know that I have Maurice, I wish to marry him. Why, no one can bitter against him?"

"He take you from me."

"Well, if I marry anyone the same thing will happen, Isabella would, indeed, I'm sure, I'm very, very sorry, but I could not help it, could I, Dido, my Dido?"

"Not blame me? You marry, an' ole Dido sort lonesy pleased. But dat jaller-boy name, I tell you—"

"Why, what about him?"

"Not blame me? You marry, an' ole Dido sort lonesy pleased. But dat jaller-boy name, I tell you—"

"We are engaged."

"Engaged, she say me?"

"Nonsense! She likes Maurice herself, mamzelle Isabella, mamzelle, she wants our engagement kept quiet for the present, but when I do tell Miss Jo Jo can see by mamzelle's face that they will object."

"Hah, an' we make'em see me," said Dido, darkly. "But why you marry dis same jaller-boy?"

"Because I marry to please myself, and you," said Isabella, sharply. "Don't know your thoughts, Dido; you would like me to marry Harry Sefton, I know that as if he can conspire with Maurice—"

"Wrong, lamsy. I no wish dat man."

"Then, Dido, what do you like?"

"Dat, Dido, Dido all time, lamsy, dat, lamsy—bery, lamsy—bery—bery."

"I don't understand, mamzelle Isabella. Tut-tut-tut, I know that he is clever, he is so young and handsome, he knows beyond the place." She walked to the end of the veranda, and stood for a moment in the glare of the sunshine. Suddenly, she turned, her face strike her, and she turned towards the negress.

"Dido, you wouldn't like to see me the wife of Dr. Rivaldi?"

"Yes, lamsy. Dat bery big great man! He lub you. He lub old Dido lub you."

"He seems to have been very confidential, said Isabella, reflectively, "for from what I have seen, Dido, he has some influence over you."

"Me" said the negress. But while her face was turned away, her black eyes, rounding, fixed upon the woman. Dido was a great one, you know, She no frost up dat dere—but bery lamsy, lamsy, you marry him!"

"Why Maurice?"

"You jaller-boy lub him, lamsy. Nobody, nobody—Dido lub you, lamsy. Dr. Rivaldi say dat doctor he marry you!"

"Well, Dido, we will see, we will see."

She never finished what she was about to say, for at that moment Dido stepped out of the room, and her eyes crept a strong, grey-haired little man, with a cringing manner, his face white, but darkled in the skin, and there was something negroid about his face. This dreadful little creature was a cousin, who had become a pensioner of Isabella's. He had attached himself to her like some faithful dog, and rarely failed to present himself at least once a day.

What his real name was nobody knew, but he said that he was called Hartlebee. He was civilized, he was altogether an unpleasant object to look upon, and Isabella was sorry for the creature, and sided him with food and a trifle of money. He never had mentioned that Batterson, although he knew nothing of the man, was terrifier afraid of Dido. Perhaps some instinct in the negress had enabled her to read Rivaldi's Dido, however, coming from Dido's mouth, lacked all its force with mortimer.

"Also, mamzelle, said she, in deep guttural tones, 'you think on dat yaller-boy' name?"

"Maurice?" Yes, I'm thinking about him; and you know it."

Dido's front black eyes flashed out a gleam of rage, and she—poor Dido—knew that mamzelle's partiality toward white twinkles stemmed in another direction. At all events she interpreted the woman's speech with an imperious gesture.

"No more of dat, Dido. I know that I have Maurice, I wish to marry him. Why, no one can bitter against him?"

"He take you from me."

"Well, if I marry anyone the same thing will happen, mamzelle Isabella, I'm sure, I'm very, very sorry, indeed, I could not help it, could I, Dido, my Dido

Osborn the Candidate, and Osborn the Man.

American politics has developed in the candidate genus a distinctive character as distinguished from the natural man. With some marked exceptions, the lineings has bred generations of hypocrites. At the county fairs and in the back woods taverns the average candidate has been schooled to mask his real self. To the dear people he is all that true statesmanship demands, while to his valet he is no hero.

In Chase S. Osborn there is enough of the "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde." In his person the candidate and the man are identical. There is no false bottom in his strawberry box. As a candidate he is just what God put into the man—frank, honest, fearless and magnetic. No trurer knight ever poised a lance or parried a thrust. He is as chivalrous as a Bayard and as brave.

The writer of this has enjoyed an intimate personal acquaintance with Chase S. Osborn for twenty years. We knew him many years before he entered the political arena as a candidate for office. We saw the same man then that he is now, except that his innate manliness has made a more finished development. Extensive travel and an exhaustive study of men and conditions at home and abroad have increased and intensified his mental power. He fears naught that men can conjure up, because he knows himself and his own hand guides the craft that carries him. He knows the channel, and he knows where the reefs are. False beacons cannot lure him from his course, nor false alarms strand him in the breakers.

In Mr. Osborn the candidate and the man are one and the same. As the chief executive of the peninsular state the governor and the man will be identical. No changed condition in life can make anything of Chase S. Osborn but just what he is—an honest man.

The Frankness of Chase S. Osborn.

From the Cadillac News and Express.

Chase S. Osborn, whose candidacy for governor is receiving more than its share of attention just now, delivered an address to the Modern Woodmen of America at Grand Rapids last night. The gathering in the hall made up of for the occasion was the largest that ever assembled in a Grand Rapids paper, and Osborn's address is referred to as "the most straight-forward talk as well as the finest bit of eloquence ever heard there." It has been recently said that Chase Osborn is making mistakes in the things he says and the way in which he says them, and this may be true. It will be remembered, however, that ex-Governor Pingree was constantly criticised for saying things too bluntly and without sufficient care for the political requirements of the case. There is no question as to what Osborn means when he says a thing. He tells you what he thinks and why he thinks so and what he will do and why he will do it, and he probably gives ten opportunities for criticism where a careful, diplomatic politician would not give one. But it is usually true that the people prefer the fellow who is frank with them and who is not prevented from doing and saying things for fear he will sometimes make a mistake. Chase Osborn probably would not be the next republican candidate for governor if a state convention had the matter entirely in its hands, but it is not so certain that he will not be with the matter entirely in the hands of the individual republicans in all sections of the state.

Senator J. C. Burrows in a statement just issued defines his position most clearly regarding his interpretation of the Michigan primary election law, especially insofar as it relates to the election of United States senators. The senior senator from Michigan makes the declaration that it is his opinion that it was the intention of those who framed and enacted this law that in choosing a United States senator each member of the legislature should be bound by the result of the primary election. The senator is willing to submit his case to the entire electorate of the state and not leave the matter to be decided by a party caucus.

The "Law and Order League."

From the Cadillac News and Express.

The law and order league organized a few days ago at Ludington and which announced that it stood for "true temperance and public morals" evidently had not one purpose in mind. In its organization announcement the Ludington law and order league expressed fear that the adoption of local option in Mason could would bring the law into contempt and it therefore seemed best for some of the business men of the town to get together very promptly in order to oppose local option and preserve the law from contempt. It apparently did not interest the Ludington law and order league that Charles Smith, the railroad worker, who evidently becomes a dangerous man when drunk, was permitted by the saloons of Ludington to fill himself with whiskey whenever he wanted to. The father fact that Charles Smith was shot and nearly killed by his sixteen year old boy in that city a few days ago, while the father was cruelly beating the child's mother, may or may not be known to the Ludington law and order league. Their time and thought is probably being given to preserving the law from contempt through preparing to keep local option out of Mason county. Such incidents as the almost murder of a father by his boy in order to save his mother's life can be left to temperance fanatics and local option zealots to think of and to mourn over. The law and order league of Ludington has matters of larger moment and more importance on its hands. Local option is said to be coming in its direction and local option may lead to disrespect for law, the same law that the boy and his mother at Ludington have not been protected by through recent years and which the little fellow was compelled to disobey in order to save his mother's life. Just a little peculiar in its estimate of values is that Ludington law and order league. Perhaps more than a little.

Installed Officers.

The Pine River Camp of the Royal Neighbors of America held a meeting at the I. O. O. F. hall Friday evening, Jan. 21. After an initiation, they installed the following officers for the ensuing year:

Fine skating in the harbor. All the boys are taking advantage of it, including Grandpa McCann.

The big victory for local option is shown by the decision of the Kent county supervisors to submit the question to a vote the coming spring. The "wets" of Grand Rapids have bitterly fought this proposition. This is the second largest city in the United States where the friends of reform have the day to carry the great moral question to a vote and the result will be watched with interest.

Grand Haven is the principal import point of beer into Michigan from Milwaukee, and according to the figures the imports for the year just closed were 20 kegs, while during the previous year the total was 220 tons and the year before 289 tons. The above figures are from the report of the custom house at Grand Haven. It certainly looks as if something (perhaps it's the 30 dry counties of Michigan) is seriously affecting the product of the "Cream City" over in Western Michigan.

BASHFUL STANLEY.

His Response to a Speech of Eulogy at a Banquet.

William H. Rideing tells in McClure's Magazine of a dinner of the Pangyrac club in Boston at which Henry M. Stanley, the explorer, was the guest of honor:

"Whether he (Stanley) sat or stood, he fidgeted and answered in monosyllables—not because he was unsociable or unappreciative, but because he—this man of iron, God's instrument, whose word in the field brooked no contradiction or evasion, he who defied obstacles and danger and pierced the heart of darkness—was bashful even in the company of fellow craftsmen.

"His embarrassment grew when after dinner the chairman eulogized him in the author. He sunfirmed and averted his face as clear after clear confirmed the speaker's rhetorical obsence of praise. 'Gentlemen, I introduce to you Mr. Stanley, who, etc.' The hero stood up slowly, painfully, reluctantly, and, with a gesture of deprecation, fumbled in first one and then another of his pockets without finding what he sought.

"It was suggested that he was looking for his notes, and more applause took the edge of the delay. His mouth twitched without speech for another awkward minute before, with a more overt leaning, he produced the object of his search and put it on his head it was not proper, but a rag of a cap, and with that on he faced the company as one who by the act had done all that could be expected of him and made further acknowledgment of the honors he had received superfluous. It was a cap that Livingstone had worn and that Livingstone had given him."

Flies at Sea.

The finding of flies and butterflies a long way out at sea is perhaps the most modern a fact not very well known. A recent traveler in the tropics relates that when thirty miles out from land a plague of flies overtook the vessel on which he was steaming. The cabin was so full of them that the lamps were shadowed. Common black houseflies were the most part, with, however, a good sprinkling of large green flies. Where they comist have come from was a mystery, but they were a terrible nuisance, and, although those on board swept off hundreds in a net, their numbers were not sensibly diminished. Another singular circumstance was that, although no land was in sight, large dragon flies repeatedly flew across the ship and a large dark butterfly was observed to fit across in the direction of the nearest land, quite thirty miles away, without stopping to rest on the vessel at all.—London Globe.

A Disappointment.

"Uncle Jed," asked his neighbor, "how is your boy getting along at college?"

"First rate," answered Uncle Jed. "He hasn't cost me a cent. He's working his way through. He's winning all the class honors, and they're proposin' to give him a professorship of some kind."

"Great Scott," gasped his neighbor, "is that all he is doing? With that big husky frame of his I supposed he'd be playing center by this time!"—Chicago Tribune.

HOW LONG IS A DAY?

Some of the World's Inhabitants Eat 365 Meals During One.

If we should meet a man and he should casually remark that he ate 365 meals yesterday we would doubtless be somewhat astonished at his appetite. Likewise we would feel sorry for the man who said that having foolishly eaten three eggs with mason for breakfast, he had no appetite for his Christmas dinner. But maybe the first man was from Spitzbergen, where they have a day three and a half months in length, whereas the poor chap who missed the Christmas feast had in Finland, or Torea, where the Christmas day is something less than three hours long.

On the whole, it would be rather wise if one should undertake to ascertain what, exactly, is the day in journeys, to understand just where the work is to be done, else one might have to labor eighteen and a half hours at Stockholm, or, if happen ed to be the longest day of the year, or all the time from May 21 to July 22, if at Wardhuys, in Norway, or St. Petersburg the longest day is nineteen hours and one-half long. At Torea, Finland, there is a twenty-two hour day. At London and Stockholm the longest day is sixteen and a half hours, while at Hamburg and Dantzig there are seventeen hours in the longest day. In Washington the longest day is about fifteen hours.—Exchange.

HIS CONUNDRUM.

Propounded in Prose, It Was Answered in Rhyme.

In the olden time before the war, the days so famous for generous hospitality, a certain Southern gentleman was assembled at dinner in a beautiful country homestead. The table was loaded with dashed meat and fowls and the guests began to vie with one another in proposing conundrums.

Mr. Alexander H. Stephens offered one which puzzled the whole company. "What is it that we eat at breakfast and drink at dinner?"

For some time no answer came, and the bright eyes of the southern ladies began to sparkle with triumph, when Colonel Johnson, taking up the "Compromise Binder" of his hostess, which lay conveniently by, wrote impromptu upon the flyleaf the following answer:

"What is eaten for breakfast and drunken for dinner?
Why, fresh eggs or butter or mosses?
Sure double the quantity of molasses will do!
Who eats what he drinks and drinks what he eats.
But let us consider, 'The surely salt but for Nor coffee nor cocoa, whether heated or Nor hoecake nor
Nor boiled eggs nor poached nor fried in a batter,
Is man, then, to be bread. Ah, yes—when 'tis toast!
—Atlanta Constitution.

Blackburn's Eloquence.

The story is told of senator Proctor of Vermont, a Republican, that when invited to go out of the senate chamber just before the day's session began he replied: "Excuse me. I am paired with Senator Blackburn on prayer." Now the Rev. Dr. Butler retired from the chaplaincy of the senate because his prayer speech surpassed all others for ardor and felicity of expression. The comparison of the senate chaplain's prayer to Blackburn's eloquence was well were in tears. It was even said that responsible senators who had never shed a tear since the ratification of the treaty of Ghent actually sobbed aloud and refused to be comforted. At length, said eloquent Blackburn, as soon as adjournment was effected, and the senators passed out to their homes, he passed the chair Senator Vest in an undertone remarked to the vice president, "Joe never saw him!"—Washington Herald.

YOU ARE READING THIS AD.—OTHERS WILL READ YOURS

MOST everybody reads the ads. in this paper. They furnish as much news to the man in town and on the farm as the personals, and often more. ¶ Peter Smith's wife wants a new hat. Smith sees by the paper that Jones is selling hats at so much. Johnson's store ad. is missing from the paper—Johnson's trying a nonadvertising policy.

RESULT—Jones gets Smith's money.
Smith's wife gets her hat.

Mortgage Sale.

Default having been made in the conditions of a mortgage made and executed by John W. Hall and Mary Hall, his wife, of Charlevoix, Antrim County, Michigan, the mortgagors, to Lee Howland, of Charlevoix, Michigan, January Second, nineteen hundred and five, which said mortgage was recorded in liber one hundred and twenty-four of mortgages, on page one hundred by the said Honorable Maude, there claimed to be due and unpaid at the date hereof the sum of one hundred seven dollars and one dollar and fifty cents, and the further sum of one dollar and fifty cents for the expense of this foreclosure, and no suit or proceeding at law or in equity having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part of it, and the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage and the statute in such case provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, at the Michael Sidder, at the east front door of the Court House, in the City of Charlevoix, Michigan, on the 10th day of March, A. D. 1906, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: Commencing at a point one-quarter of land situated in the Township of Norwich, in the County of Charlevoix and State of Michigan, Commencing at a point on the north half of the north-half of section twenty-six of township thirty-three north range nine west, running thence south one rods, thence west one rod, thence north one rod, thence east one rod to the place of beginning containing one-fourth of an acre, more or less, subject to the rights of way of record.

Dated December 21, A. D. 1905.

TYPHOID BACILLI FOR MURDER.

Suspected Man Is Known to Have Bought Germs

So firmly convinced are the relatives of Thomas H. Swope of Kansas City, that the deaths of the multi-millionaire philanthropist and his nephew, Christmas Swope, did not occur from natural causes that they have placed the investigation into the cause of the deaths in the hands of a law firm with instructions that all the millions of the dead philanthropist be used if necessary to get at the truth.

The assertion is made that both Thomas Swope and his nephew were poisoned and that the author of the crime also inoculated the entire Swope family, consisting of eight people, with typhoid germs in an effort to exterminate them. The bodies of the two dead Swopes have been exhumed and their organs are being analyzed. The death of both Thomas and Christmas Swope by convulsions after being taking a capsule and the subsequent illness from them of the entire Swope family with typhoid led to the investigation.

Shortly before Christmas Swope's death, the man to whom Napoleon Swope had placed the office of a well known barber-legist of Kansas City was attacked some typhoid germs. With these deadly bacilli those pushing the matter believe he poured to kill the members of the Swope family.

"I am buying these merely to do some experimenting," he is said to have told a barber-friend. Napoleon Swope became seriously ill with typhoid. When it was found he would likely recover, he had the inoculation of the typhoid bacilli did not take as was expected, he set about a second time to make sure of death, according to the theory of those conducting the investigation. Since that time the other seven members of the Swope family have been taken down with typhoid.

JOHN R. WALSH IS DEFEATED.

Former Banker Denied Writ of Certiorari by Supreme Court.

The petition of John R. Walsh, the Chicago former banker, for a writ of certiorari was denied by the United States Supreme Court in Washington. D. C. John R. Walsh went to his office in Chicago the other morning early to receive to hear the result of his appeal to the United States Supreme Court from the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals' affirmation of Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis' five years' imprisonment at Leavenworth, Kan., on the charge of mismanagement of the Chicago National Bank. At the same time he expected to be informed that the last signature required

BRIDE BEATEN, FLUNG IN WELL.

Found Near Death and Accuses Husband of Crime.

William Perris was forced the other morning by the freezing of his well in Bridgeport, Conn., to seek an old well that had long been out of use and he found a woman up to her neck in its icy waters. After being beaten and robbed she had been thrown into the well as 7 o'clock the night before. The woman was Mrs. Joseph Brooks, a bride of a week. For thirteen hours she had clung to an old pipe in the well hoping to save herself from drowning. When she was taken from the water it was found that both of her feet were frozen and that amputation would be necessary. As soon as she had been taken from the icy water the woman accused her husband of the crime, and the sheriff and the police force are seeking him in all directions. A confederate, according to the woman, aided in the crime and disappeared with the husband.

SEE 1910 AS RECORD BREAKER IN BUSINESS

Correspondents of St. Louis Bank Are Unanimous in Their Optimism.

WEST AND SOUTH ARE TO BOOM

Large Crops and Growth in Industry and Manufactures Forecast by Observers.

Record-breaking commerce for 1910 is the unanimous forecast of several hundred correspondents of the National Bank of Commerce in St. Louis, one of the largest financial institutions in the South and West. Communications from bankers of most of the southern and western commonwealths indicate exceptional vitality in agriculture, industry, finance, manufacture and trade, with almost as strong a demand for money as was experienced in 1907.

Manufactures and industry will, according to the authoritative predictions, recover completely in 1910. Factories, mines and mills will be rushed with work. Construction operations will be general and preventious. Wholesale and retail trade will be heavy. Agricultural production will be large and diversified.

Opinions expressed in the letters sig. nify that idle labor will be reemployed and the country, as a whole, will enjoy its greatest prosperity. Yet it seems to be impossible to gather clearly whether there will be a decided reduction in the cost of living. As well as may be inferred, prices will continue high on all the necessities of life, although the improvement in conditions, resulting in the reemployment of idle labor, should have the effect of providing the wage earner with larger means and thereby causing better ease.

The increase in the gold supply is given as one of the causes of the high cost of living, and authorities appear to be agreed that it is a powerful factor. But high prices are ascribed to additional causes including the inadequacy of the supply to the demand, the increasing population, the unprecedented prosperity, extraordinary development, growing demand, reduced supply, combinations and agreements as to prices cost of service in trade, and even, paradoxically, idle labor.

Indications are excellent in farming regions, and heavy production in the outlook. But crops will be more diversified than ever, but it still is hard to predict the range of prices, or to say where the decline is likely to show. Grain districts promise a large output, whereas cotton healthier complaint, to some extent, of the boll weevil and ever confidently to a diversified crop of production.

A BEAU OF THE OLD SCHOOL.

SUFFERING IN THE WEST.

The Supply of Coal Rose Short as the Cold Increases.

The cold weather has caused factories in many cities in the West to shut down for want of coal and hundreds of persons have been forced into idleness while there are orders on hand to keep them at work if coal could be had. Hardly any of the factories in Indianapolis are running full time, and even those are husbanding it, as there is no certainty when another supply can be got.

The railroads cannot haul the coal, though there is plenty in the mines. President Kelson, of the Indiana Operators' Association, says that aside from the heavy general business of the road in the last six weeks there has been considerable cold weather, which diminishes the motive power one-half, that two engines are required to haul what is a load for one in ordinary weather, and besides the two engines have to cross the track twice directly do. The result of this is that roads are furnishing empty cars to the mines on the stipulation that the coal is to be for the railroad company's own use.

In a number of cities prices of coal have increased greatly in two weeks and there is suffering among the poor and there is suffering among the poor

FOUND DEAD IN RESTAURANT.

Boston Harbor Puller Near Crime and Two Suspects Are Held.

With the doctors yet at sea and the police still searching for clues, the case of John Ryan, found dead in a Boston Harbor restaurant under most mystifying circumstances, is presenting a difficult puzzle for unravelling. Two suspects, Bennie Sullivan, alias "Kid" Carter, and Bert Smith, colored, are being held pending the verdict of the coroner's jury. Carter and Smith's place of business, where Ryan was found dead, blamed in a corner in the rear of the restaurant, has been closed. Into men disclaim any knowledge of how Ryan came to his death, though the police say they have one witness who is positive that the two were with the man when he expired. The bartender of a saloon adjoining the restaurant, forced his way through Ryan is known to have had considerable money, but not a cent was found in his clothes.

BURGLARS BUSY AT MASON.

Shortly Tracks Due and Receives Property Stolen Elsewhere.

Two bold robberies have been committed in Mason. Mrs. Robert Lindemann, of Jackson, found burglars at her home after spending the day with a friend and found the lock on her door had been forced and that a tin trunk in which money and papers were kept had been carried away and the contents. Some odd fashioned pennies and curious coins were found scattered over the floor, and $20 in cash was gone. Sheriff Cline and his officers hastily rounded up suspects, but could find and in less than twenty four hours had located and returned the money. They also had refused to give any names, only saying that "it was a shame" of reorders is reported by jobbers, while the retail trade in Michigan, remains reaching wholesale homes from travelers is fairly good.

The question of higher costs is being considered by many manufacturers who are finding higher prices for raw materials and requests for advances in wages.

The latter was handling the fork and had just thrown it up and over his shoulder without being aware that Robert was approaching. When Adolph fell he turned and saw his brother and saw his brother fall dead at his feet.

EXPOSITION BUILDING BURNS.

Fire Destroys Furniture Exchange at Grand Rapids.

Fire started in Young & Chaffee's furniture shipping room in the Exposition building, in Grand Rapids, caused a total loss approximating $275,000 to building and fire. The building belonged to the Furniture Exchange, one of the five big furniture exposition buildings, which was completely destroyed. The building was occupied by thirty-four sample lines of furniture, with losses ranging from $500 to $20,000 and a total of over $100,000, few of them insured.

GRAIN ELEVATOR BURNS.

Big Fire at Henderson Gives Town Night Scare.

Fire, which is believed to have originated from an overheated stove, totally destroyed the Pillinger-Gordon-Detwiler Company's grain elevator in Henderson, and for a time threatened to wipe out the business section of the town. An employee, on his way to dinner, noticed smoke rolling from one end of the building and at once gave the alarm, but the flames spread rapidly and, fanned by a high wind, soon involved the whole structure. The loss involved in covering of the elevator acted as a protective for the stocks and stores in the vicinity. A thousand bushels of beans, 500 bushels of rye, 1,000 of wheat were consumed. The loss is placed at $5,000, partly covered by insurance. The elevator will be rebuilt.

Fire Threatens Sun Block.

Fire threatened the jewelry store in the center of the business section of Sault Ste. Marie recently when the Sun block burned. The Leland Hotel and the Thompson dry goods store adjoining were badly damaged by water and smoke. The fire was fought in zero weather.

ALL OVER THE STATE.

Political Comment.

Democratic orators made speeches on "Jackson Day," the anniversary of the battle of New Orleans, in which they urged the party to fight against the "murder of special privilege" as well as Jackson fought at New Orleans.

Though such utterances can hardly be regarded as the result of peculiar inspiration, they really contain advice worth following. If the Democratic party really intends to do any further effective fighting it will find some invaluable suggestions in Jackson's campaign.

For instance, it might remark the important fact that the army at New Orleans devoted its energies to meeting the enemy instead of to internal squabbles. There is no record that the Tennessee riflemen raised the point that the Louisiana Creoles had not voted the regular ticket in the preceding election. Neither is there on hand any where the suggestion that the Creoles be thrown out of the array on these grounds.

It is also worthy of note that no blue-blooded Kentucky gentleman ever asked the question of nativities in aid of legislation that is close to the hearts of the progressives. It is impossible to speak of triumphs. We must wait to see what become of the legislature. Meanwhile the President's inaction is clear, and is also the popular cause has an honest and able advocate.

Attempts to injure him by exalting himself, telling what Roosevelt would do in this, that and the other emergency, antitrust, the tariff, the tariff of 1912 and making Roosevelt President are manifestly unfair and be side the point. It is Taft who is carrying the tremendous burden of responsibility. No one can say just what another man would do under the circumstances, but it is entirely out of the dispute of the burden with a fine flourish of gossip and idiotic talk.

Suppose we wait, then, a few more months or another year before handing down any final decision, and give the President a chance. Suppose we let his splendid record of public service in the past count for him as it should, and give to suspicious, business interests and others who are weighed down with the weight that properly belongs to them.—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Postal Deficit.

The discussions of Postmaster General Hitchcock's report indicate that the country is not greatly taken by surprise at the revelation of losses on the business matter, and is in greater worried over the matter. It is an easily ascertainable fact that the losses accumulate mostly on hand in hand with the marvelous profits on Rural mass matter. In other words, the one creates the other. The carriage of letters is immensely profitable. Letters result from the carriage of newspapers by correspondence. There is no business that is more persistently pushed by correspondence than the development of the circulation of newspapers, magazines and periodicals.

This fact, of course, does not justify a rate that results in a great loss upon the government. Nobody claims that. It does, but those interested in seeing the government ahead and not the loser of the loss. It is not all in question. It is due to over-charges by the railroads for hauling the mails. This is something the government has made one or two feeble attempts to look into, but it has never gone to the bottom of the matter. Now that the Postmaster General has stirred it up, he should use the power which he has to find out whether he is not paying too much.—Lansing.

The Tariff and Postage.

What will result if the contemplated increase of postage on magazines and newspaper publications is carried into effect? Certainly a larger deficit will occur in the government's post-office department this year as compared to 1909.

Lack of full study of the situation is shown by the recommendation to increase postal rates on these articles. Newspapers and magazines do more to nationalize literature than any other one thing. Every so much of the postal business grows out of the publicity created by these newspapers and magazines. Answers to advertisements, in order that they may reach the advertiser, must go through the mails, which means a sale of stamps up in the thousands. They are the medium which creates the largest sale of stamps and may practically be called the government's traveling salesman.

No record is kept by the government of the business known as "official business" on its books. If such a record were begun it would disclose the fact that it costs from $75,000,000 to $100,000,000 annually to carry on this business. Perhaps this is the cause of last year's deficit.

Why not find the leak and mend it instead of jumping at theoretical conclusions? The money action should be taken by the government before the matter is thoroughly looked at.—J. H. Deean in Chicago News.

TAFT DEMANDS LAWS TO CURB LAND GRABS

Special Message on Conservation Barely Touches Ballinger-Pinchot Trouble.

FOR $30,000,000 OF BONDS.

Sum Needed for Irrigation—Urges Action Without Waiting for Probing-Committee Report.

Declaring that portions of the public domain worth millions of dollars have been obtained fraudulently by private interests, President Taft, in a special message to Congress, asks legislation that will permit the national government to conserve its vast resources in lands and water power in the sparsely settled regions of the West and Southwest without waiting for a report by the Congressional committee that is probing the Ballinger-Pinchot controversy.

The message deals with the need of Congressional action for the conservation of the natural resources of the nation and supports the general policy of conservation. The need for a waterway project specifically approved is that of introducing deep waterways into the Ohio River from Pittsburg to Cairo to assure a nine-foot stage at all times. Mr. Taft favors waterway development as "the best regulator of railroad rates that we have."

Conservation of the soil is imperative if the nation would provide for the increase in production necessary to meet the growing consumption, he says. He recommends that the message, "that authority be given to use, not exceeding $30,000,000 in addition to the sum heretofore set for the completion of the conservation projects already begun and their proper extension, and the bonds running ten years or more, to be taken up by the proceeds of return to the reclamation fund, which returns, as the years go on, will increase rapidly in amount."

The slight references to the trouble in the interior department, which is contained in the closing paragraph of the message, is the only allusion to the trouble which resulted in the discharge of Pinchot and brought about an acute situation in the capital and throughout the country.

The President retires at some length the history of the nation's public domain and points out the federal laws by which he says have permitted vast waste and the holding of millions of acres of land by a few. At one point the message says:

"The truth is that title to millions of acres of public lands was fraudulently obtained, and that the right to recover a large part of such land for the government long since ceased by reason of statutes of limitation."

Other Points in the Message.

Some of the President's other recommendations follow:

The rapid disposition of the public lands under the existing laws and methods of distribution prevailing, should, in my opinion, be stopped, and should rapidly pass into private ownership and cultivation, that it may be unencumbered, and that it was not the intention of the government in the land laws.

"Our institutions into institutions of free men, and the common school system of our friends, have been tightened considerably by the withdrawal of coal lands for the benefit of the people. The policy seemed to prevent the acquisition of monopolistic statutes, except as far as the public lands are concerned, and the best opportunity lands, are not to be acquired by individuals, but are to be held for the benefit of the public. Legislation should be enacted to permit the acquisition of coal lands under such conditions as will prevent the acquisition of a monopoly by individuals or corporations, and yet will permit the development of the lands by the public that character of development which secures the greatest benefit to the public and to the public.

"Congress now, by joint resolution, has authorized the withdrawal of water power sites from entry, and the President and to authorize the necessary examinations and reports to Congress looking toward such legislation as will permit the development of water power under proper conditions, and yet will prevent the acquisition of a monopoly of the water power of the country by individuals or corporations. I am in accordance with the President and to authorize the necessary examinations and reports to Congress looking toward such legislation as will permit the development of water power under proper conditions, and yet will prevent the acquisition of a monopoly of the water power of the country by individuals or corporations. I am in accordance with the President's policy in this matter and hope that the necessary legislation may be speedily enacted.

"I shall recommend in the future, if it be deemed desirable, that the work be done by contract.

Bellaire Independent: The Bellaire Creamery will be sold at public auction January 27. While the present owners could not see their way clear to develop this industry, it is hoped the purchasers, whoever they may be, will not give up the effort to place it upon a paying business foundation. Creameries in other localities succeed, and there is no reason why the Bellaire plant should not if given reasonable support.

Petoskey Record: A number of men from Walloon Lake, who went to Flint about six weeks ago, have returned, stating that they could not stand the cold weather prevailing at Flint; and say that if they have to freeze to death they prefer to be at home where they will get a decent burial.—A local real estate man stated, a few days ago, that since the big Western Michigan fruit exhibit in Chicago a few weeks ago, nearly one half the farms on their "for sale" list have been withdrawn, their owners having decided to stay in western Michigan a few more years. The educational campaign of the bureau is doing great things for the farmers of this section and the little book, "Western Michigan Fruit With Flavor," is a gold mine for industrious farmers.

Cheboygan Tribune: Dr. John H. Bailey, one of the oldest citizens of Mackinac Island, Mich., died suddenly at Fort Smith, Ark., early Tuesday morning, aged 77 years. Kenyon, who was in the city yesterday, stated that the iron furnace and charcoal chemical plant has started in full swing with 200 men employed, the furnace having contracted for their output for the next two years at the mill run. Their chemical plant, Mr. Kenyon says, is the finest in the United States. While the town of East Jordan is getting busy with its furnace and chemical plant, the farmers are devoting more time than ever to their fruit raising on a large scale, and improving the standard of fruit raised. Professor L. H. Taft of the M. A. Charlevoix County Fruit Grower's Association.

A meeting of all interested is called for Tuesday, Feb. 1, 1910, at Votruba hall, East Jordan, to perfect a permanent organization for active work.

PROGRAM

10 a. m. Adoption of by laws and election of officers for current year.

1 p. m. Discussion: (a) What fruits can be grown with profit in Charlevoix county? (b) What varieties of each are best adapted to our location and conditions?

4 p. m. Selecting place for next monthly meeting and topics for discussion.

4:30 p. m. Adjournment.

Discussion will be informal, the object being to get individual opinions based upon experience or observation.

The questions for discussion are the first that confront all engaging in or enlarging upon fruit culture, hence they have been selected as appropriate for the initial meeting.

All farmers and others interested are urged to be present and give the meeting the benefit of sound opinions.

The membership fee has been fixed at fifty cents per annum and fees will be accepted and receipts issued by any of the following, pending the election of permanent officers.

Hope City: L. F. Knowles, Jasper Warden.

Charlevoix: E. B. Ward, D. S. Payton, Wm. Withers.

East Jordan: Martin Rohling, Bert Olney, Geo. Darby.

Boyne Falls: Fred Wagner.

For the business meeting of Feb 1st, the payment of dues will constitute membership and members only will be entitled to vote in the organization of the association, but all others interested are cordially invited to attend.

Special Meeting of the Board of Commerce.

Notice is hereby given, that a special meeting of the stockholders of the Charlevoix Board of Commerce, will be held at the Court House in the City of Charlevoix, at 7:30 p. m., on Monday, Jan. 31, 1910.

This meeting is called for the purpose of voting upon the proposed amendments to the by-laws, as recommended by the special committee appointed at the regular annual meeting, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it.

Every member is urgently requested to be present.

SERMON FROM SHAKESPEARE

(Copyrighted by Bradley Garretson Co. 1910)

O God, that men should put an enemy in their mouths
To steal away their brains!
(Othello, Act II., Sc. 3.)

The age of great Elizabeth was an age of extremes. Extravagance is the keynote of the time. There were no half-hearted performances and the men of the period went to excess in all things. Strong drink, the curse of the Anglo-Saxon race, had begun to fasten its shackles on high and low alike. Already the Englishman had a continental reputation for drunkenness. This is admirably illustrated by the words of the Venetian Iago: "Your Dane, your German and your swaggering Hollander—Drink, ho!—are nothing to your English." Shakespeare's keen mind was awake to the evil and it would be difficult to find in any author stronger condemnation of drunkenness. To him drink was an enemy of man. "The invisible spirit of wine" was to him "a devil." So often does he make his characters speak with passionate vehemence against strong drink that the reader can come to but one conclusion—the greatest genius of the race abhorred drunkenness.

It is difficult to conceive of the exterior of Sir John Falstaff and Sir Toby Belch in the role of a temperate drinker, but no mere telling discourses on the evils of intemperance was ever delivered than that contained in Act II, Sc. 3 of "Othello." Cassio has "with joy, pleasure, revel, and applause" transformed himself into "a beast." By close application to his profession, by his gentle manners and noble character he was winning his way upward. A trusted soldier—he was carving out a brilliant career in the field abroad. One drinking bout apparently calmed all, and in his despair he could but exclaim: "O! I have lost my reputation! I have lost the immortal part of myself and what remains is bestial."

Drunkenness destroys confidence. A man who, through strong drink, has once been guilty of a breach of trust is no longer believed in. Its associates, friends and employees are always expecting that the enemy which he allowed to steal away his brains may again take hold of him. He is a tainted object, and it is difficult for him to live down his reputation. He lives under a cloud of his own creation, a cloud hard to scatter.

Shakespeare has fittingly called strong drink "an enemy" of man. It is his worst enemy—destroying more lives, bringing more unhappiness into the world than war or pestilence. And yet how careless men are of its presence! If a plague is abroad in the land the quarantine are shouted through "run of contagion, lest this enemy stalks boldly through the haunts of men. Few can put it in their mouths without being made the bearer for it. "It blurs the countenance, it is a destroyer of virtue; it is the parent of hatreds. Under its influence the heart of love is changed and parents neglect their children, children become callous to the suffering of their parents. It seizes upon the business man, and the structure reared by years of patient toil topples to the ground. The body is a temple in which the infinite may dwell, and so far as it is kept pure and clean so far are men as gods. They defile their bodies by indulging in strong drink. The temple too often becomes a sewer.

Shakespeare strikes at drink on every fitting occasion. To him "every moderate cup is unblest and the ingredient is a devil." It may be argued that Shakespeare condemned drink only for excess in drinking. True! But "one doth breed a habit in a man." and in time the strongest-willed of men may through continued indulgence, become slaves to "the terrible spirit of wine."

Among men good fellowship is expected to be the glass. Hamlet, Prince in Denmark, lived among hard-drinking, but in friendship, while an enemy enters the cup. It is a custom; many men drink to it. Shakespeare has his warning words for such a custom. He makes Hamlet, the darling child of his brain, denounce this pledging of health in passionate language:

"It is a custom
More honored in the breach than the observance."

Shakespeare, although speaking of the classes, in thinking of his England, Englishmen were fast earning a reputation for drunkenness, a reputation which still clings to them. Hamlet was right. The social drinking custom is more honored in the breach than the observance, and the man who refuses to conform to the custom is highly valued by his fellows. They may laugh at his scruples, but in their heart of hearts they say to themselves, "Do thou and do likewise." But few men fail to realize the danger there are in from the habitual use of strong drink.

Man has been made a little lower than the angels. "In apprehension how like a God, the beauty of the world, the paragon of animals." This is his birthright. He is this by reason of his brain. What a fool he is, with a deliberate hand, to put an enemy into his mouth to steal away his brain, to take from himself his partnership with the infinite and to transform himself into a beast.

The following is a clipping from the Gaylord Times-Herald: "An important announcement comes from Grand Rapids this week, which will if authentic have a decided effect on Gaylord and its feature. It is the report that the White Brothers contemplate the extension of their road, the Boyne City, Gaylord & Alpena in an easterly direction from Gaylord within the near future. It was announced a year ago that the company would build east to get at large tracts of timber held by this company, but nothing was done during the year in the way of active building operations though it was frequently rumored that the company was preparing its equipment in the company shops at Boyne City to get things ready for the extension work. The news of the present year is important and will be read with pleasure by all as well as with the sincere hope that the report is true. The story referred to was printed in the Grand Rapids Press Monday and read as follows: At a meeting of the directors of the Boyne City Lumber company held in this city Saturday the directors decided to expend $300,000 in the purchase of 10,000 acres of hardwood timber land in Montmorency county. This action was confirmed at a meeting of the stockholders held later in the day. The tract is located east of Gaylord on the line of the Boyne City and Alpena railroad and active operations will be begun thereon the mill road is constructed to the new tract. This probably will be within the next year. The mills and plants of the company are located at Boyne City and the tract is estimated to cut from 85,000,000 to a hundred million feet."

Boyne Journal: In the first basket ball game of the season last evening, the Boyne City high school live completely out-classed the Charlevoix high school team. The feature of the game was the team work of the Boyne City players, who were as follow: Capt. and left forward, Wickett; right forward, White; center, Mallorson; left guard, H. Silvertein. A large and enthusiastic crowd was present, even standing room being at a premium. The boys have a long schedule ahead of them and are determined to do their best in working for other victories. After the game a delightful informal high school dancing party was held.—The meat trust boycott has reached Boyne City. As usual Boyne City early gets into new fads and styles and it is so in this case. The movement started a few days ago in Cleveland, where 6000 men signed a pledge to do without meat for a month in order to compel the meat trust to reduce prices. The matter has been taken up by different labor and other organizations all over the country and it is now growing fashionable in this city, where petitions are being circulated and are being freely signed. Our local dealers should have had some warning so that they could have disposed of their stocks before the boycott became effective for they are not to blame for the high prices. However, they will likely be able to get rid of what they have on hand, at least, or, if not, it will keep a month if packed on ice.

With the added industrial activity of cement factory construction, next summer promises to be a lively one in Charlevoix.

—The fishing tug G. H. Green, owned by a Mr. Hill, of Cheboygan, was sold Tuesday by U. S. Deputy Marshal O'Donnell, to another Cheboygan party for $155. The tug was libeled for a Cheboygan coal bill. She lies on the bottom near the Booth dock. The Green was formerly owned by John O'Neill and was by him sold to Hill.

—Ice conditions are rather confusing. Tuesday morning everything was clear both here and at Beaver Harbor. Wednesday morning the lake was clear of ice off this port, but St. James reported no water in sight. Weather mild. It begins to look as if our St James friends will have to wait until navigation opens for their mail.

—John Miller, of this city, was quite seriously injured last Friday. He was hauling logs, and was crossing the bridge with a heavy load, when the chain fastenings gave way. The logs were thrown to the bridge floor with Mr. Miller in a bad mix-up with them. He is laid up at his home, and will be for some time.

—Hon. C. A. Palmer, of Manistee, was here from the late Monday evening train till the morning train out. He is expected here again today. Mr. Palmer is the manager of the Osborn gubernatorial campaign in this congressional district. In this selection Mr. Osborn exhibited his usual wisdom. Thomas Sharp Gordon Browne, Dick Darling, John Brock, Wm. Garland and Minnie Garland, Milton Russell and Jake Allen.

Wastefulness is Reprehensible.

There is a powerful amount of money wasted in postage in this country—an amount that if expended in a humanitarian way would relieve very much suffering and distress.

A very considerable bunch of this wasted money is directly chargeable to the "Michigan Publicity Bureau," an own blood brother of the "Michigan Law and Order League," both of which came into existence to fight local option.

The SENTINEL is about every day receiving circulars and marked papers, on every one of which there is at least a one cent postage stamp. This literature, no doubt, goes to other country papers—the SENTINEL is not the only good country newspaper in the State.

The latest was received but yesterday, and being over-weight, it bore a two-cent stamp. It was a page proof sheet of matter written by the press agent of the brewery syndicate, and the attached circular letter stated that the plate matter of the same would be sent express prepaid, if the publisher so desired.

The circular letter was not answered, but a marked copy of this paper is this day mailed to the aforesaid press agent, and the plate matter—matter that is instructive and interesting—can be bought in Chicago for two cents per inch. We have two boxes of it on hand now, and there is not an inch in of it that defends or condones murder, robbery or rape, or that is inimical to the peace of the freeda or the good of society.

We cannot see the "publicity bureau" plate matter. In fact there is not money enough in the treasury of the publicity bureau, or any other distillery bureau to secure the publication of it in these columns. Locally, we made this plain a year ago. We cannot and will not fight the enemy with one hand and pass ammunition to him with the other.

But we revert to the subject of wastefulness. Don't waste any more postage on this office!

Circuit Court.

Judge Mayne will open the February term of court next Monday morning, with an average calendar. There are six cases of violation of liquor law, some of them coming over from previous terms, as follows: The People vs. Thomas Sharp Gordon Browne; Dick Darling; John Brock; Wm. Garland and Minnie Garland; Milton Russell and Jake Allen.

ANOTHER ROYAL CLAIMANT

Horse Thief Vows He's Son of Queen Gam King of Beaver Islands.

Grand Rapids Herald: James Pierce, alias Arnold, alleged partner in crime of George Sage, or Gabriel Strang, who is now awaiting sentence for stealing a team and sleigh from John Koster, was brought to the jail here yesterday afternoon from Chicago by Deputy Sheriff Sergeant.

According to the statement of the officer, Pierce practically admitted his guilt on the way here, but yesterday he would not talk. He was placed in a cell far away from that occupied by Sage and the two will not be allowed to communicate until after Pierce's case is disposed of.

According to statements made by Sage his life has been one of deep personality, a partial replica of the character portrayed in Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. He is a son, he says, of James Jesse Strang, or "King" Strang the Mormon ruler of the Beaver Islands, whose tragic death history records. When a boy he went to Ligonier, Ind., and there he lived as a respectable citizen and business man. But it was through kinfolks to whom that he made his first mistep and did a criminal act. The name of this friend Strang quite to his relative the little boy. He has not used any names in any of his stories and cannot be induced to do so.

At Ligonier strang was known as "Honest Gabe Strang," and his word was as good as his bond. A request by him for a loan at the bank was always granted and no questions were asked. He became a Texas land agent and his observations of the land in the southwest were always taken as fair and not one person could be found, the neighbors at Ligonier say, who would hint that they had been induced to invest their money unprofitably by Gabriel Strang.

Gabriel Strang, the benefactor, is well known to the people of Ligonier. They know that he once became acquainted with a young lady who possessed an inheritance to secure an education, but lacked the money. Strang had the necessary means and also the big heart, they say, and when the young woman is an instructor in one of the Michigan state institutions and is able to retain the position by an education secured at the Ypsilanti Normal school from the kindness of heart of Gabe Strang, or George Sage, horse thief, as you please.

Death of Mrs. Knight.

Mrs. Jane Knight, widow of the late Richard Knight, died at her home in this city early Sunday morning, in the 76th year of her age.

Mrs. Knight was in her usual good health up to within three day of her death. While sitting at the supper table she was stricken with paralysis, which spread rapidly, unconsciousness ensuing soon after and continuing until the moment of her dissolve.

Deceased and her late husband were among the best known and earliest pioneers of Antrim county. She was born in England, where she spent the days of her girlhood, and where she was married, coming with her husband to this country soon after.

Mr. and Mrs. Knight located on a homestead in Banks township, near Atwood in 1864, clearing up and developing one of the best farms in Antrim county.

Mr. and Mrs. Knight, about twelve years ago, retiring from active work, buying a home in this city, where both passed to the beyond, after honorable and useful lives.

Deceased was survived by one son and one daughter—William Knight, of Banks, and Mrs. A. E. Palmer, of Kalkaska.

The funeral occurred Tuesday afternoon from the Congregational church.

Important Business Change.

The common council and board of public works have long been of the opinion that the wiring and electric lighting feature of the city lighting plant is not profitable. They therefore decided to cut it out as a municipal enterprise.

As a result of this decision the city last week sold to De Forrest H. Wood the supplies on hand and abandoned the work.

Mr. Wood received his electrical training under superintendent Martin date, serving the past five years in the city plant, in this branch of the work. With this experience, under so good a teacher, it goes without saying that he is fully competent to continue the work.

He has fitted up rooms in the rear of Wood's barber shop, in the Cold Fellow building, and is ready for business.

MIXED BLOOD TROUBLE

All Told, 3,168 Persons are Trying to Get in Against the Protests of Chiefs and Head Men of the Ottawas and Chippewas.

A Washington dispatch to the Grand Rapids Press says:

A tremendous tangle has developed in the government's effort to pay the Ottawas and Chippewas of Michigan what the courts have found to be their due. Lawyers have been hired to make a light. The big question is whether the mixed bloods shall have a share in the distribution.

All told, 3,168 persons of Indian extraction are trying to get in against the protests of the chiefs and head men of the sure enough Ottawas and Chippewas of Michigan. If they succeed, the roll will be brought to the total of 5,608, and the per capita distribution will be a little less than $14. If they fail the rolls will aggregate 5,440, and the per capita distribution will be more than $22.

The question of mixed breed is one of the most perplexing which the government has faced in its whole history of trying to square accounts with the noble red man. Supposedly, the rolls made for the distribution of 1870, which was the last distribution under the treaty of 1855 with the Michigan Indians, furnish the basis for this new distribution. The head men assert their willingness that such half breeds as actually were enrolled and paid in 1870 should share in the present distribution, but they decline to admit the right to distribution on the part of the children of those half breeds.

The difficulty is made all the greater through a peculiar tribal custom which the Indian agents have found exists among the remnants of Michigan Indians. That is, an Indian or half breed marrying into their tribe is accepted as a member of that tribe according to the will of the chief or head man. And the children or persons not originally belonging to the tribe are admitted to membership according to the will of the same tribal authority. In some cases parents request that some of their children be admitted to tribal connections, and do not make the same request for their other children. Consequently in the same half breed family the agents found some children who were accounted members of the tribe by the Indians themselves and some who were not. The best evidence available indicates that membership often has been secured through favoritism.

Those mixed bloods whose rights are questioned number 1,565. Many of them are not even half breeds. It would be difficult to trace them from your next door neighbor. But they put themselves into evidence as soon as they learned that Uncle Sam had some money to hand out.

The Indian bureau has almost completed the roll, and it will be passed upon by Secretary Ballinger, son his decision as to participation will be dead according to the act of congress. Accordingly the outlook is that there will be a hard fight before him, with oral arguments and the filing of briefs.

The total to be divided is about $120,000. Most of this was found by the court claims to be due the Indians under old treaties. According to those treaties the Indians, in consideration of money to be paid, agreed to give up a great deal of land, and to break up their close tribal relations.

The Woman's Congress.

The first Woman's Congress of Charlevoix county, was a decided success, the number in attendance being ninety-seven.

The subjects presented were such as appealed to town and country homemakers, and were very much appreciated. The work done proved that women from the farms are giving intelligent thought to the manner of conducting the affairs of the household, to the importance of conveniences and pleasant surroundings; and certainly farm life does not prevent a woman's being able to speak well and profitably in public as was shown by the state speaker, Mrs. E. J. Cryts, of Lansing, and others.

The presence of the normal class and their very efficient teacher, Miss Himes, is a significant hint of increase of interest in farm matters in the near future.

Mrs. Cryles tried to impress upon her hearers that a woman's work is uplifting, ennobling, a labor of love, and in no sense should it be looked upon as drudgery.

The program was brightened by music given by the normal class.

A fading vote of thanks was given to Mr. VanVelt for the use of his hall.

The election of officers resulted in the re-election of Mrs. Elmer Ingalls as president, and Mrs. Jamie McGough as secretary.

"The Mystery of Hesden Cob," Etc.

"My mother is week where Dido is concerned," said Isabella, shaking her head.

"And we are you, my dear," responded Maurice, kissing her forehead. "Dido is week, and have yielded up your wills to that woman, but the announcement of your engagement will give me some influence in the home and in away with all that. It will be as much to Lucie, sister of Dido's mamma, and I am a civilized wizard, listened to by Dido.

"Why do you particularly wish to announce our engagement to-day?"

"My dear child," he said, slowly, "I keep on seeing visions of an normal of David. I have seen for a long time that he loves you, and knowing his fiery temper, I did not wish to provoke a scene in your presence. Though you had promised to be my wife, but last night the truth was forced from me by my love, and you declared that he intended to ask you to marry him.

"Did I ever tell you, I have yet?

"I know that, but he didn't. Lucie, you know how I love another, but he is ignorant that we are engaged. When the first a publicity announced, he may give up his idea of marriage, and as a quarrel was forewarned."

"Are you afraid of quarreling with him?"

"Yes. Not on my own account, but it distresses our good Major to see us at loggerheads, and I promised my father you had might, though, upon my word," added the young man, with a blush, I believe Rivaldi presented the row."

"Rivaldi!" repeated Isabella. "Dr. Rivaldi?"

"Yes, he is in love with you."

"I know it," replied the girl, quietly. "But of course, I could never, he is old, and I love his son, I love him. But Dido wishes me to marry Rivaldi."

"Oh, hang Dido!" cried Maurice, vigorously. "I wish she would mind her own business."

At this moment, as if summoned by his remark, Dido appeared round the bend of the path. She looked straight before her, cording neither to right nor left, and passed the pair like one in a sleeping fit. The lovers seemed to be under the influence of some strange sensitiveness, and ran stumbling down to the gate.

"Cuckoo! Cuckoo!" she cried, hoarsely.

"Oh," said Isabella, nervously. "Dr. Rivaldi must be at hand. When Dido says 'Cuckoo' he comes."

CHAPTER V.

"When Dido says 'Cuckoo' he comes," repeated Maurice, in a whisper. "Are you talking of Dr. Rivaldi?"

"Yes." He seems to possess some strange power over Dido, for she always comes when he is approaching. Sir Maurice, Dido is waiting at the gate; in a few minutes you will see Dr. Rivaldi enter it."

The two young people looked steadfastly at its brilliantly colored figure of the morrow, standing in a conscious attitude near the great iron gate, which, bright and cheerful, lay in that sublimer red Sierra, with its thick fringe of bands, form one side of a position of self which seemed to dominate and redeem the whole beautiful scene. Maurice felt Isabella shudder with nervous dread as she pressed closer to his side.

"Dearest, you must not be afraid," said he, shaking her anxiously. "Is this your man? Was that three off the tree? Through her half-closed eyes she looked stealthily at the subtle face of Rivaldi. With an effort of self-control she guessed that something important had brought the doctor to see her. Dido was not a man to waste his time on idle visits to strangers.

Now Mrs. Dallas was acutely afraid of Rivaldi, as he had received hints from Dido that the doctor knew more about her than most people, and the dire dreaded lest his visit should portend harm, and, as in some trepidation, waited for him to speak. But Rivaldi, regarding her frame of mind took his time, and it was only when Isabella spontaneously with some too for, leaning forward that he broke the silence.

"Don't go away, Miss Dallas" he said, entreatingly. "I have something to say to your mother which concerns you."

Isabella turned pale, for she guessed what was coming. Rivaldi had called his video. Mrs. Dallas, with some curiosity, raised herself to look closer at Rivaldi, and, by seeing that his auditory was attentive, prepared to honors his thunderbolt.

"Mrs. Dallas," said he, in a soft voice, "you must have been for a long time that my visits have not been made without an object. To-day I come to ask you and your sweet daughter a question."

"Oh, dear, dear!" she said breathlessly, leaning forward to hear the answer to his purpose. "It will only give you a headache."

"Not a bit," said Maurice, looking at his rival. "Then why did you not ask to Abbanford?

"I never give myself unnecessary trouble, and, of course, I knew that I should find you here.

"By what right do you say that?" demanded Maurice, sharply.

"By the right of our conversation last night, Mr. Aylmer. I have forestalled me, I see. No matter," added Rivaldi, with a smile. "To-day to you tomorrow to me."

At this we quite unintelligible to Isabella, who looked from one to the other of her companions, in wonderment, not guessing, for the moment, that she was the bone of contention between them. She saw the suppressed hostility on Sir Maurice's face, and noted also that Maurice, flushed by the mild, triumphant manner of the doctor, had enough difficulty in keeping his temper. She perceived that there should be no go to the house.

"What was the matter with my poor mother?" she asked. "What have you been doing to her?"

"She was agitated, my dear young lady, and I have calmed that agitation.

"After having previously caused it," said Maurice, in a significant tone.

"What possible reason have you to make such an accusation?"

"I think it is my fault," said Isabella, humbly. "I remarked that Dido was always satisfied when you came to this house."

"I guess that in a measure," Miss Dallas. If you remember, I scored Dido of a bad negative bias order by hypnotic suggestion. Her mind, therefore, became habituated to responding to mind and doubtless she took a kind of hypnotism which tells her that I am near."

"In other words," said Maurice, sarcastically, "you have obtained an influence over her."

"It is not impossible," rejoined Rivaldi, in measured tone. "I am one of those people, Mr. Aylmer, who can, by strength of will and power of character, which power ever amount which."

As he spoke, Rivaldi cast a sudden glance at Isabella. The girl was leaning towards the home, out of which her mother had fled, and was, as he saw, not see the menace in his regard, but he understood the meaning and felt his regard at all it implied.

In plain words, Rivaldi intimated, in a veiled manner, that Isabella was a nervous subject, over whom he had exercised influence, if he chose, by means of hypnotism.

"You have been in the West Indies, doctor," asked Maurice, blandly.

"I have seen all other the world, Mr. Aylmer," purred Rivaldi, deferentially. "Yet the window sill looking over wrongly."

"I know something of most things," assented the doctor. "But I confess I take but little interest in African barbarities."

"Oh! what about Dido and her meeting you?"

"I have explained that to the best of my ability," responded Rivaldi, coolly, and now, Mr. Rivaldi, as our business is approaching, you must excuse my replying to any further questions if you want further insight into my character, call upon me at my house."

"Thus I shall certainly do," said Maurice, for he was confused to learn all he could about the strange man, who that he could protect Isabella from his wiles.

"Ah!" said the doctor, with irony, "we shall see if you will venture so far."

Before Maurice could take up the implied challenge, which threw doubt upon his moral courage, Mrs. Dallas, unknown to anyone, had crept out, and Isabella had already dilted like a white butterfly into the drawing-room, and her mother received the two young men in a manner remarkable for her sullen, and ponderous and vague.

"So pleased to see you, Mr. Aylmer," Mrs. Rivaldi I am charmed. It is a delightful day, is it not? Rembrandt and of Dutchman."

"I have never been in Barbadoes," said Maurice, "and I should like to see good game was directed. "But Dr. Rivaldi may be able to answer your question, Mrs. Dallas."

"I have the West Indian islands, observed Rivaldi as they walked into the house, "and in my day, they were as a little of the climate there; but I remember no snakes."

"No!" murmured Mrs. Dallas, shaking into a shudder. "I should think I have been in the Sa will the morning, and only one snake I ever saw, I should certainly go back to Barbados."

Mrs. Dallas had made this threat so many times that nobody paid any attention to it, and, as she rippling on answer, she began to fan herself slowly, as if to recover her composure. Rivaldi looked stealthily at the subtle face of Rivaldi. With an effort of self-control she guessed that something important had brought the doctor to see her. Dido was not a man to waste his time on idle visits to strangers.

Now Mrs Dallas was acutely afraid of Rivaldi, as he had received hints from Dido that the doctor knew more about her than most people, and the dire dreaded lest his visit should portend harm, and, as in some trepidation, waited for him to speak. Lillie for Lieut. Governor.

Colon C. Lillie, of Coopersville, has announced himself as a candidate for lieutenant governor.

We venture the prediction now that Mr. Lillie will win out, and there are reasons for this prophesy.

First of all, he is eminently well qualified for the place.

Secondly, there is probably not another man in the state who can more competently or worthily represent the farmer element, which is the most important of all.

Mr. Lillie is a prominent farmer and stock breeder, and has for years been actively associated with farmers' institutes all over Michigan. There is no citizen of the state who stands closer to the farmers than he, because he is one of them.

Third, he not handicapped by any political entanglements, and has nothing to "explain" in the matter of personal record.

Colon C. Lillie is a clean-headed, level-headed and intelligent citizen, who is an honor to the state and the party.

Grand Rapids Herald: Chase S. Osborn was indorsed by the Lowell board of trade as candidate for governor at the banquet given by the organization Wednesday night. The motion to indorse Mr. Osborn was made by Frank T. King, president of the King Milling Company, who although a democrat, is a great admirer of Mr. Osborn. After hearing Mr. Osborn speak at the banquet, Mr. King said: "I am a democrat, but I be hanged if I don't turn Republican just to vote for Osborn."

The candidacy of Chase S. Osborn for the governorship is taking hold in this section. It seems to be the general opinion, in which the News shares, that should Mr. Osborn be the next governor there shall be a stirring up in Lansing. He is a vigorous personage with lots of ginger, and a wide knowledge of business as well as politics. It is from such a man that Michigan must regain the prestige lost through the Warner administration. It will take direct and plain dealing to get the blood into the veins of Michigan and eradicate the abuses which now exist. We know of no better man than Chase Osborn and we feel quite sure he will have the opportunity to show that he comes up to this standard. —News, Millersburg.

Payton—Gilbert.

A quiet wedding took place in the home of the late Dr. and Mrs. F. C. Warne, of East Jordan, Mich., Wednesday the 20th, when Miss Mildred Bell Gilbert and Vernon Swayne Payton were married. The ceremony was performed at eight o'clock, p. m. by the Rev. Mr. Brigstly, the Episcopal ring service being used. The bride whom was given away by her Uncle, Mr. J. Warne, of Petoskey, wore cream Venetine and carried American Beauty roses. She was attended by Miss Elizabeth Warne, who wore bordeaux and carried Russian violets. Mr. Payton was attended by Mr. Fred Hesselt. The room was decorated with white carnations and smilax. Mendelssohn Wedding March was played by Miss Payton, sister of the groom. Following the ceremony a wedding supper was served to about forty out of town were, Mr. J. Warne and daughter, of Petoskey, Mr. and Mrs. Dayton Payton, of Detroit, Michigan, Miss Helen M. ABOUT WHITEFISH Called From Report of Illinois Fish Commissioner.

Why have our fish decreased at such an alarming rate within the last fifty years? Fishermen are asked this question every day. The answer invariably is "Caught away." But why are they being caught away at such an alarming rate? Anyone familiar with the fishing industries will say, "Too many small fish have been and are still being caught." Still the decrease would not have been so noticeably fast had only a reasonable amount of their eggs hatched and the fish thereof grown to maturity. Michigan, Wisconsin and Illinois have had a closed season on whitefish and trout for a number of years, still there was the same decrease in these fish.

The government and state have been artificially hatching and planting these fish for more than twenty years but for a number of years the planting was done in a very careless manner, regardless of their natural spawning grounds, or these fish were dumped from high boats, where the shock killed the most of them. They were also planted in waters that were teeming with herring and perch, which made good food for these, and none of them could survive. Then more care was given to the planting; men studied their nature, found rocky reefs where instinct told the fish to deposit their eggs, and where there are protection and food for the young and we can reasonably say the increase of whitefish we have had in the last few years is the result of these plantings.

Scenists, fish culturists and some fishermen have come to the conclusion that the reproduction of the whitefish in the natural way is so limited that it overcomes but little more than the natural mortality. One of our greatest fish culturists, who studied the nature and habits and reproducing powers of these fish for over twenty years, counted the eggs and found that the average sized female had about twenty eight thousand eggs, the largest number found. A fish weighing thirteen pounds had one hundred and thirty thousand (130,000) eggs. We can naturally figure on about one tenth of these eggs hatching, and one fourth of the fish thereof growing to maturity. If this should have been so, man never could have depleted these waters of fish as they now are. The same culturist found a reef that could be enclosed with netting and placed therein twelve whitefish of each sex, where they could spawn in the natural way. The females averaged three and one half pounds and had an average of 36,000 eggs each. The percentage of eggs hatched was so surprisingly small that we do not wonder these waters have been depleted of whitefish. Out of this enormous number of eggs one hundred and thirty five young fish came to life.

Then the whitefish is a defenseless fish, has no way of protecting itself, and we can safely figure that at least three-fourths are destroyed by trout, perch and herring before they grow to maturity. Had these fish been as productive as some species, as, for instance, the German carp, the lakes would have been so overcrowded that there would not have been food enough for them. The Almighty in His wise forethought had provided for this emergency in letting such small amount of eggs fertilize. Also His words are true, "Where thou sowest not, thou canst not reap."

Whitefish are our most valuable food fish, and the most easily caught. At certain times of the year they find their food in shoal water, along the shores and banks, where large quantities were dragged ashore with seines. This was also the harvest for the pound net fishermen. Boatload after boatload was taken, the large ones sorted and sent to market, the small ones thrown back into the water after having died, or buried on the shore. There was no law prohibiting the catching or wasting, and millions of young fish were destroyed in this way.

Gill net fishing has undergone a complete change. From small sailing smacks and eighteen to twenty four acts we have developed to the use of steam tugs, and could run from nineteen to six hundred and fifty acts. Fishermen had made their living easier, from five to three and three fourths inches, which caught fish of one pound in weight, and before the species had a chance to spawn even once in its lifetime.

Fishermen would run further and fish later in the season with the tugs. They planted nets by the thousands on reefs where the fish had crowded to spawn and completely caught them away. The demand has increased with growing population, fishermen concentrated all their energy on the catching of these fish, and with the small percentage of reproduction it is easy to figure why they have decreased so alarmingly fast. It was simply harvesting where they was no sowing or planting, and whitefish had become almost extinct in the south half of Lake Michigan.

Saved From Awful Peril.

"I never felt so near my grave," writes Lewis Chamblin, of Manchester, Ohio, R. R. No. 3, "as when a frightful cough and lung trouble pulled me down to 115 pounds in spite of many remedies and the best doctors. And that I am alive today is due solely to Dr. King's New Discovery, which completely cured me. Now I weigh 160 pounds and can work hard. It also cured my four children at croup." Infallible for coughs and colds, its the most certain remedy for lagrippe, asthma, desperate lung trouble and all bronchial affections, 50c and $1.00. A trial bottle free. Guaranteed by F. G. Primitive Philosophy.

Animism is the name of a theory originally propounded by Stahl, about 1707. It asserts that the soul is the vital principle and only cause of life, and that the functions of plant and animal life depend upon this principle of vitality, and not mere mechanical and chemical action. As the word is now used, it denotes the general doctrine of spiritual beings. It is not itself a religion, but a sort of primitive philosophy.

Civilization Defined.

An inquirer wants us to define civilization. Suppose we say it is the process of learning to use dangerous tools—liberty, luxury, wealth, education, organization, art, music—they are all dangerous. Civilization expresses us to them all.—Harper's Weekly.

Republican Committee Meeting.

There will be a meeting of the Republican County Committee.

You are earnestly urged to be present at this meeting, for there is important business to transact. If you are unable to attend personally, please see to it that some one attends in your place.

The main object of this meeting is to formulate plans for the organization of a "Charlevoix County Republican Club," and to arrange for a large banquet in the near future.

The date of this meeting is fixed for Feb. 8, 1910, at one o'clock p. m., and to be at the Court House in the City of Charlevoix.

Sincerely yours,
W. J. PEARSON, Chairman.
H. I. McMILLAN, Secretary.

PARIS RAGPICKERS.

An Occupation That Is Passed Along From Father to Son.

The ragpickers of Paris are born to their work, the occupation being passed from father to son for generations. Each ragpicker family has its own district, which is inherited by the children and grandchildren.

In spite of all the progress made in modern and elegant Paris barrels of waste are piled up on the streets in front of many buildings on beautiful boulevards in the early morning hours, and it is the privilege and in fact the mission of the ragpickers to examine this refuse.

They have use for everything, and but little is left after they have passed, their thoroughness being one reason why the system is still allowed. Every scrap of paper has its market; rags are gathered for paper manufactures; shoes go back to leather dealers.

Old sardine and preserved meat tins are used for nailing playthings, old bottles produce gelatin and glue, bones and orange peels are greatly sought after and sold at the rate of 4 cent a pound to perfume and sprig manufacturers, old meats are highly prized, cigar stubs go to tobacco factories, and even stale vegetables are carted away.

The quarters of the ragpickers of Paris are just outside the barriers of the city—sections carefully avoided by honest people after nightfall, but good. Every member of the family, from the oldest to the three-year-old, takes part in the sorting of the spoils, and it often happens that members of a family do other things besides, now and, it denotes the general doctrine of spiritual beings. It is not itself a religion, but a sort of primitive philosophy.

ATOP THE FREIGHT TRAIN.

Walking the Cars a Hair Raising Experience For a Novice.

There came over me as I sat in the caboose last evening a wild desire to ride with the engineer in the cab. Planning to slip ahead along the half mile or so of train at the first stop, I made known my desire to our conductor over that part of the run.

"They'll be glad to see you," he told me. "You won't have any trouble getin' there. It's a wild evening." He swung upon the window of the lookout and called to his brother brakeman, "Jim, the cole, run along with this here party." Jimmie pulled me through the window of the lookout before I clearly realized the entire plan.

It was a slippery path over the roofs of sixty cars to the big engine that was pulling us, and the wind that swept in from the shores of the lee-bound lake, along which the tracks ran, was enough to make anyone shiver over the prospect.

Boosts and Knocks.

How comes it that the evil which men say spreads so wildly and lasts so long, while our good, kind words don't seem somehow to take root and bear blossoms? Is it that in the stony hearts of mankind those pretty flowers can't find a place to grow? Certain it is that scandal is good, brisk talk, whereas praise of one's neighbor is by no means lively hearing.—W. M. Thackeray.

GOLD HIDERS.

The Aurohuacos of Colombia Worship the Yellow Metal.

Inhesting the snow clad slopes of sun kissed Aborigeta, The Sentinel, one of the highest peaks in the Sierra de San Marta, in northern Colombia, is one of the strangest tribes of Indians known to ethnologists—the Arhuacos. Their name means "hidden gold," or "gold hiders," and that is just what they are. They worship the yellow metal, dividing their devotions between gold and the moon. The Aurahuacs will do anything for gold. Murder is nothing if it gains him the tiniest bit of gold. He works for any kind of money. When he gets enough silver or copper or paper money he changes it for gold and then hurries with it to his mountain fastnesses, there to hide it, and come back for more. Why he wants it is impossible to say. No Aurohuacs ever was known to part either with gold dust or gold coin.

His neighbors, the Taiennacns, are wholly different. They regard gold or emeralds, also found in Colombia, as simply a medium of exchange for whisky or squaws. The Taiennacns is superstition to an almost degree and wears a wild turkey's foot on a necklace as a talisman against sickness and bad luck. He worships fire as the cleansing and redeeming god.

In this favored region is plenty of alluvial gold which only needs to be taken out to make the republic of Colombia rich and powerful. But the superstitious spoil the best laid plans of men who come there to mine. They let men dig and dig and wash their fingers away washing the precious yellow grains out of the earth, and then they murder the men for their treasure. This has been done countless times. Many a skeleton that witnesses the sides of "the Sentinel."—New York World.

Dew Water.

The ancient "dew ponds" of England have their modern counterparts on the rock of Gibraltar. Some drinking water is obtained by the condensation of the abundant dew in specially prepared basins. The primitive process consists in making a hollow in the ground and filling the bottom with dry straw, over which is placed a layer of clay, on a clear night the clay cools very rapidly, and the dew is condensed into water that can be used. The pond is proved by putting a layer of asphalt into the bottom and sides of the basin. At Gibraltar the present practice is to use wood instead of straw and sheet iron instead of clay.

The Howards.

The Australians are known to be the most hospitable people for a stranger, many of the nobles tracing their descent back to almost the dawn of his story. It is said of the Howards, it is generally admitted that the duke of Norfolk represents the oldest family in the world. According to the most authentic genealogies, the Howards are of Saxon origin, the name in those days being Herward. As far back as 1066 they are mentioned as owners of the family.—London Globe.

A Pot Walloper.

The parliamentary register for 1806 showed that there was then only one pot walloper in all England. One section of the term for the first time might easily imagine that a pot walloper was a species of lobbyingsamer or some other reptile of the genus. It will be discovered upon inquiry, however, that the term "pot walloper" is literally one who boils a pot and was applied to voters of certain burroughs of England where before the passage of the reform bill of 1832 the qualifications for voters and expenses allowed by law were confined to the mere fact of boiling (walloped) his own pot in the parish for six months.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Wonderful Musical Memory.

Sir John Stainer had a wonderful musical memory. It was put to the test once at the Crystal palace when he had to play the organ in the "Messiah" and a fuse caught on which alone he could see the score, was not forthcoming. The conductor was in a dilemma. Sir John cut the knot by a wonderful tour de force, playing the part faithfully from memory, probably the only time the "Messiah" has been so rendered.—London Standard.

THE NATION RISES TO LOWER FOOD PRICES

Lawmakers Join Women and Clergy in Seeking Means of Exactions in Necessities.

PROTEST MEETINGS PLANNED

Department of Commerce and Labor Starts Investigation—Consumers to Boycott Dealers.

A mighty wave of protest against the increased cost of living is sweeping over the country. This wave, unique in many particulars, is gathering force as it rolls and surges from East to West and from north to south. Already its force is powerful; it promises to become irresistible. From persons of high degree and low degree this protest is emanating. Women and women's clubs are widely forward in any popular move—have taken the matter up with a will. Clergymen—Catholic, Protestant and Hebrew alike—bishops, archbishops and a cardinal, are inveighing against the tremendous increase in the cost of things necessary to feed families and entire the Anti-trust combinations are being forward; men, women and children in different sections of the country are taking pledges to abstain from meat and other articles of diet until the price shall have been lowered. The national House of Representatives has been asked to order an investigation into the whole question and the Department of Commerce and Labor already is making an inquiry into the subject.

The Attorney General of Missouri is planning an investigation into the high prices of meat and has asked other Mississippi Valley states to join him in the work. A resolution has been introduced into the Ohio Legislature calling upon the people of the State to abstain from eating meat for the next eight days. There are just a few of the ways in which the mighty, almost-country-wide protest against an intolerable something that has forced up prices of necessities and luxuries has taken hold.

Women of the country are most energetic in the fight which has been begun. Women, some whom devolves the work of supplying the table and supplying good, nourishing food for hungry little mouths, have looked not upon at the ever decreasing supply in the face of increased expenditures and are ready and willing to join any movement that promises to remedy present conditions.

President Taft commends the stand of the National Anti-Trust League in a letter to Mr. Emil Scharf of Washington, president of the league. President Taft said that he believes any effort that may make for the betterment of the conditions of food and the necessities of life. His indorsement of the league work is unequivocal. There is no question by the President of the league of a resolute wide boycott by the American people against exorbitant prices.

To show how great in the last three months has been the increase in the price of articles of food—meats, poultry, canned goods, butter, eggs and lard—the following table has been prepared by the Chicago Record-Herald:

	To-day	Three months ago
Eggs, per dozen	42	36

SCARED GIRLS LEAP TO DEATH.

Five Philadelphians Die as Result of Panic and Fire.

Four girls and a man leaped to their death the other day in a panic caused by fire in a four-story factory building in Philadelphia. Five others received probably fatal injuries, and many more were hurt. Nearly all of the dead and severely injured were employed in the shirt waist factory of Joseph Chaikkin, on the fourth floor. Chaikkin was injured, one of his daughters is dead, and another dying. His force of operators was greatly reduced owing to the shirt waist strike. Otherwise the number of fatalities probably would have been greater. The flames originated in the elevator shaft, and spread through the entire shirt circulating of the electric motor.

Cheekhin's factory operatives leaped from windows. Men on the street spread blankets and jumped from upper break their falls, but in the smoke which filled the narrow street many fell to the pavement before them. Firemen fire nets could be extended for them. The building was crowded with fire escapes and fire ropes. One man, instead of lowering the rope and sliding down it, jumped from the window with the loose end in his hands. He was killed.

WANT FOOD PRICES LOWERED.

Farmers Demand That Duties on Necessities Be Reduced.

Asserting that under existing conditions revision of the tariff upward necessarily involves a revision of the standard of living downward, farmers of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho, attending the convention of the Farmers' Educational and Co-Operative Union, took action demanding that tariff duties on the necessities of life be lowered.

OHIO HITS THE FOOD TRUST.

Cold Storage to Be Regulated and Price Boosters to Be Prosecuted.

Every energy of the Ohio state government is to be enlisted in the fight for a revision downward of the cost of living. Gov. Harmon, Attorney General Denman, State Food Commissioner Hunting and Speaker Meyers have entered into close co-operation to achieve real results. Gov. Harmon sent a special message to the general assembly. Speaker Meyers and the Senate leaders will give right of way and boasting to necessary legislation. The Attorney general will draft bills and resolutions and prosecute conspiracies to boost prices. The dairy and food department and the state board of health will hunt for the facts and causes of food prices and the condition of food sold from cold storage warehouses.

First will come a campaign to get the facts. A joint committee will make a legislative investigation. The committee will be amply financed, will hold hearings, and examine witnesses in a dozen cities. Commissioner Hunting's food inspectors will be set to work to gather data. The chemists of the state board of health will examine food kept for various periods in cold storage. The public will be asked to take a hand in the crusade for facts. This triple line of inquiry by state agencies, by legislative committee, and by volunteers from the ranks of the citizens of the state is expected to bring together a wealth of information which will enable the legislature to legislate in a sane and effective way to lessening the high cost of living.

NITROGLYCERIN EXPLODES.

Twenty Men Caught in Tunnel Being Dug to Supply Croton.

Twenty men engaged in testing a tunnel through a small mountain near Cold Spring, N. Y., to form a part of the aqueduct which is to supply water to New York City from the Croton dam were about to leave their task the other afternoon at 4 o'clock, preparatory to setting off almost a ton of nitroglycerin, when the explosive was mysteriously fired. Fifteen of the workmen were killed and the other five were seriously injured. After two hours of rapid toil by 150 men, the bodies were reached and taken to the mouth of the tunnel.

Both houses of the Illinois Legislature have entered upon the real fight for the enactment of a primary election law.

"The program of the Democrats in the House at this session of Congress is to keep down the amount of the appropriations bills and to cut down ship subsidy," said Minority Leader Champ Clark, of Missouri, in a recent interview.

Congressman Tawney, of Minnesota, who signed a list of notorious votes for the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, thinks he has been greatly misrepresented by newspapers. The claims that he has been misquoted and that the press has charged him with things of which he is not guilty.

Secretary of War Dickinson, according to reports, will probably be a candidate for United States Senator to succeed James S. Frazier, whose term expires in 1911.

In the campaign for the re-election of Senator La Follette of Wisconsin, other lumbermen are to assist, and the first to respond was Senator Clark of Minnesota, who spoke at Milwaukee.

Mrs. Sarah Platt Decker, the former head of the National Federation of Women's Clubs is now being boomed for governor of Colorado by her women voters as a candidate for Congress from a Denver district.

ATTACKS HARD COAL COMPANIES

Government Brief in the Anthracite Case Filed at Philadelphia.

The government's brief in its suit to break up the alleged anthracite coal trust was filed in the United States Circuit Court in Philadelphia the other day by William S. Greene, special assistant to the Attorney General. The suit was brought in April, 1907, and the government's case was prepared by J. Cornell Todd and J. C. McReynolds. The three years that have intervened were taken up with the examination of witnesses for both sides. It is contended by the government that all the defendants have long been parties to a general combination and conspiracy which stifles competition and obstructs trade and commerce in anthracite coal and that they have monopolized the trade. The government asks the court to restrain this alleged monopoly and to enjoin the defendants from carrying out the contract with the so-called independent companies by which the latter turn over their product to the combination of 65 per cent of the anthracite selling price.

JOHN PARSON IS DEAD.

Head of Stock and Bond House Succumbs After Brief Illness.

John Parson died at 2:15 o'clock Thursday morning at his home, Ridge (111) residence, "Pleasant Home." He was conscious almost to the last, and the members of his family were at his side when death came. Mr. Parson's death followed a sudden and severe attack of heart disease. Until Sunday he had not been ill to the extent of the services of a physician in twenty years. Mr. Parson was head of the banking and brokerage house of John C. Ely, with offices in Chicago and New York. He was 72 years old and left a widow and two sons—John Parson, Jr., and William Parson. Mr. Parson was a member of Trinity Lodge, A. F. & A. M., the son of a Methodist minister. When his father was killed in an accident the boy, then 12 years old, was forced to leave school and help support the family.

TERRIBLE RAILWAY ACCIDENT.

Canadian Pacific Train Plunges Into River and 45 Are Drowned.

Forty-eight persons are dead and ninety-two are injured as a result of a wreck on the Canadian Pacific Railroad near Webbwood, Ontario, on the Sudbury branch of the road. Two coaches, a diner and a first-class day coach plunges from a bridge across the Spanish river. Not a person in the two cars escaped. All were caught like rats in a trap. They were drowned in the icy waters of the river.

A few hours after the disaster the coaches lay in the river with only their tops showing above the ice. The bodies of the victims of the disaster were still in the cars.

The plowing of the diner and the day coach into the river threw the other coaches of the passenger train from the track. Some of these rolled down a steep embankment. The cars caught fire. A number perished in the flames. This added to the horror of the disaster. The wreck is the worst in the history of the Canadian Pacific Railroad.

The wrecked train was No. 7, sent bound from Montreal to Minneapolis. Spreading of the rails as the passenger train crossed the bridge is supposed to have been the cause of the catastrophe. The loss of life in the disaster is in a desolate, sparsely settled country. Telegraph facilities are limited. Details are hard to obtain.

RAILROAD POOL COLLAPSES.

J. R. Keene Caught When Bubble of Stock Manipulation Bursts.

The Chicago, Milwaukee and Puget Sound and Iron stock, managed by James R. Keene, collapsed in New York, when the pool of that issue in stock exchange history the plans of the stock manipulator went wrong. In connection with the resultant drop in stocks, the Knickerbocker Trust Company, Haskins & Co., 60 Wall street, and J. M. Flax & Co., 42 Broadway, stock exchange firms, with liabilities conservatively estimated at more than $1,000,000. The stock market became confused. And, as an effect additional to those following Mr. Keene's failure, stocks tumbled, and a dozen brokers and hundreds of wanted clerks were set adrift at midnight in the effort to straighten tangled contracts of business.

The Russian foreign office has received a memorandum from the United States Government in relation to the solution for the Manchurian problem the proposition being made by Mr. Harriman by their sale to Japan. The memorandum is understood to contain a proposal that United States invites Russian participation in such a scheme. The question of the railroads would be placed largely in the hands of Mr. Harriman assistic for the financial arrangement which would see that the lines were conducted on a purely business basis and not used for political or strategic purposes.

WRECKERS OF BANK TO BE GIVEN FREEDOM

Formalities Alone Delay Release of Loofers of Milwaukee Avenue State Bank.

STENSLAND AND HERING HAPPY

Opposition to Action by Parole Board Not as Strong as Formerly.

Paul O. Steinland and Henry W. Hering, convicted wreckers of the Milwaukee Avenue State Bank in Chicago, were voted a parole by the State board of pardons at Joliet the other day, and they were informed that they soon would come forth from the penitentiary into the big outdoors.

The previous day convicts Nos. 2962 and 5, they are to take up the thread of life as they left it nearly three and one-half years ago. They have explated their admitted crimes to the law's fullest requirement. Hope as was the feeling against them after the bank failure, the opposition to their parole, although determined, little wakened the force of former occasions. The usual necessity of obtaining employment for paroled prisoners may prove simple for Warden R. J. Murphy in this instance, and instead of becoming a problem of several weeks may be taken off his hands entirely.

The decision of the pardon board was announced by E. A. Bailey, acting for Chairman Charles G. Ashbatt. It came after the conclusion of the only open meeting held by the board for some time and after lawyers and others had presented arguments for and against the parole. The session began at 10:30 a. m. at the prison at Joliet, and shortly before 1 o'clock the matter was taken under advisement. At 2 o'clock the board went into executive session.

Steinland, broken in health, was in the prison hospital, sick, but happier than he had been since the long 28th closed behind him on Sept. 26, 1906. Hering, impatient, hopeful of the future, awaited his release in a whitewashed cell which has been his home since August, 1906. There was no happier man on either side of the lowered walls of the prison than Hering. Steinland, too ill to talk, could only smile when word was brought to him in the mysterious prison manner that he was to be free.

FURIOUS FLOOD IN THE OHIO.

Ice Gorges Breaks and Deluge Rolls Down on Industries.

Tons on tons of water poured into the Ohio from the Allegheny river, when the gorge which had formed in the ice gorge at Freeport broke in the night. The Ohio rose two feet an hour and a disastrous flood was feared. All night steamers played searchlights on the ice floes and listened for the sharp rays of the light fell on the first floes of the broken gorge the picture presented was one of the rush of waters in the ice gorge at Freeport broke in the night. The Ohio rose two feet an hour and a disastrous flood was feared. All night steamers played searchlights on the ice floes and listened for the sharp rays of the light fell on the first floes of the broken gorge the picture presented was one of the rush of waters was poleroage. The rush of waters appeared first in a white ridge across the river, which grew and grew.

Ice floes, some of them as large as a city block, had to be investigated, that the country may well wait with curiosity to see what steps the government has compiled regarding prices paid for cotton seed in years prior to 1907, except the figures contained in the report of the Secretary of Agriculture for 1907. Neither the report nor the Bureau of Statistics has any information which will show either the extent of the increase in prices within the last two years or the causes. This is large as one of the reasons why the inquiry should be undertaken. Such statistics as the government has compiled regarding prices generally were collected

The Petoskey News says George H. Cushman, a pioneer of that city, located there in the early seventies and for years being connected with the Cushman House, died early Sunday morning from heart disease. The deceased as the lee king out of the civil war enlisted in the Fourth Michigan regiment.

Traverse City is now the real home of the Western Michigan Development bureau as well as the working home. As originally planned, the official headquarters were to be at Ludington, but the board of directors, at a meeting held on January 13th, adopted articles of incorporation, which made Traverse City the home of the organization. These articles of association have been accepted by the secretary of state and now the bureau has a legal existence and will go all the tights and powers that go with corporate being.

Cheboygan Tenscript: A representative of the Paper Co. has been investigating the proposition of using saw dust for fuel under boilers, and has brought about a decision, on the part of the company to convert saw dust mountain into fuel. Conveyors will be built up into the mountain in the spring and the "largest pile of saw dust in the world" will begin to be turned into use, and that to help make steam under the battery of boilers at the big paper mill. There is fuel for many years to come in this vast mountain of raw dust.

Hoyne Journal: Last night just after early bed time, a bright light in the sky over Hoyne Falls way indicated a fire and the news this morning proved that such was the case. The three story wooden building owned by Wm. Kears and occupied by H. Jaffe with a stock of general merchandise burned and both the building and goods were a total loss. The stock was estimated at about $1,000 and was insured for $3,000. The fire is said to have started near an oil tank which aided in spreading the blaze so that the fire early got a good start and efforts to put it out were unavailing.

Central Lake Torch: Apples do as well in Michigan that the fruit harvest of from a single tree has been worth more than enough to pay the taxes on an entire forty acre farm. For instance, Ernest H. Harris, Ellsworth, Antrim county, on September 19, 1907, picked 17 bushels of fruit from a Transcendent crab apple tree. The fruit was sold at 35 cents a bushel, a total of $14.45. The 1907 taxes on the 42-acre farm, with orchards and buildings, on which the tree stood, were $13.31, or $1.11 less than the apples from the tree brought. A. Buss, Arthur Meech, Henry Strauck, A. L. Pickard and J. C. Westrate, took the civil service examination for the position of postmaster, at Ellsworth, at the local post office Saturday morning.

Elk Rapids News: Fruit tree agents estimate that $50,000 worth of fruit trees will be shipped to Traverse City this spring. While Elk Rapids will not reach that figure the nursery stock already ordered for spring delivery here runs well up into the thousands, of which it will be difficult to make an accurate estimate, but as numerous agents have been working this section and some have booked orders of between $4,000 and $5,000 the aggregate will be something immense. Nearly every farmer in this section will set some fruit, many 10 to 15 acres, and a few as high as 20 to 40 acres. In fact the choicest varieties are becoming very limited at the different nurseries. What is of equal importance, the growers have become convinced that systematic spraying is essential for good fruit, and many are placing orders for sprayers.

After walking two miles through the cold and the snow, with a 38-calibre bullet hold just below the heart, and the bullet lodged in his stomach, and then lying in the Mancelona police station all night suffering from lesion charges, Grover Marcey is dying at the Antrim county poor house. Marcey, who is 19 years of age, by age and resides "wherever he hangs up his hat," arrived in town yesterday afternoon and stated that he was on the way to Bellsprings camp where he expected to work. Previous to starting for the camp, which is some miles from town, he bought a Colt 38 revolver. He said that he understood there were a lot of Kentucky men out at the camp and insight have to do some shooting. When walking along the railroad about two miles from town, he pulled out the gun to look at it and he accidentally fired it, the bullet striking him just below the heart. He started back for town and was picked up on the street, staggering and speechless, by an officer and placed in the village lockup, the supposition being that he was shot. In the morning when blood was found all over the cell, the officials investigated and found that he was shot. He was taken to the poor house and an effort made to extract the bullet, but without success. It is not believed that he can recover.

TELLTALE PICTURES.

Paintings That Have Done the Work of Detectives.

BROUGHT CRIMES TO LIGHT.

Instances of Where the Canvas of an Artist Led to a Confession of Guilt. A Woman's Portrait and a Stolen Diamond Ornament.

An artist who had suddenly become almost famous by his production of a painting exhibited at the Royal academy was one day called upon by a man whose visit was productive of the most extraordinary and undreamed of consequences.

The picture represented a lonely stretch of beach, upon which the sea was beating in long, creamy rollers. In the foreground, bending over a dead body, was a man with a wild expression on his face and with a naked knife in his hand. A ship's boat, evidently just beached, was also in the picture, and by the side of the murdered man was a bag of gold. The picture portrayed the advent of two emissaries upon a friendly shore. The one had murdered the other so that the treasure might be his.

The painter's visitor was a gray haired, wild eyed man.

"In heaven's name, sir," he gasped out, "how did you learn the dreadful story that you painted? I see you know all. I murdered my mate still to get the money that was his. I threw his body into the sea. I don't know what impulse led me to the admiralty. The first thing I saw was your picture representing the scene that took place thirty years ago."

Needless to say, the picture had been the outcome of imagination. Yet murder will out, and the guilty conscience of the man who had killed his comrade for lust of gold had convinced him that the painting was no coincidence but was indeed the actual portrayal of a dastardly and unwitnessed crime.

There is probably no picture better known in England than "The Doctor," by Luke Fildes, yet there are probably very few people aware of the fact that that arresting masterpiece was the means of bringing to light the perpetration of a crime that would otherwise never have been known.

A certain doctor in a large town committed suicide, and among his papers was a letter which ran as follows: "I have today seen Luke Fildes' 'Doctor.' The picture represents a medical man watching by the bedside of a child. It has so haunted me that I am going to take away my own worthless life and make a confession at the same time. When Arthur's—his brother's—boy died I came into money that my dead brother had settled on him. He died as all the world thought of acute pneumonia. Yet his life might have been saved had I acted as Fildes' 'Doctor' is evidently doing, with the use of all the skill that lay in my power. I hastened the boy's end and so got the money. I can bear it no more."

A well known artist was commissioned to paint the portrait of a lady in so gilded circles who boasted the possession of a most unique jewel in the form of a pendant. The lady was very anxious that this heirloom should be included in her portrait. The artist, of course, complied with her request.

Shortly after the painting had been completed a daring burglary was perpetrated, with the result that the lady lost her heirloom, and no trace of the thief or thieves was forthcoming. Years passed by, and the lady gave up all hope of ever seeing the precious heirloom again.

Now, it so happened that the artist who had painted the portrait of the lady mentioned had occasion to travel in Holland.

In the course of his wanderings he came to Dunbury and, as every visitor to that place does, strolled through the native bazaar.

Suddenly his attention was riveted by a piece of jewelry in a jeweler's shop that seemed familiar to him. It was a diamond and ruby pendant. Where had he seen it before? He racked his brains, but could not remember.

He returned to his hotel and happened to take from his portfolio a sketch of the portrait he had made years ago of the lady with the pendant.

In a moment the enigma was solved. The piece of jewelry he had seen was the peculiar pendant that his fair sitter had been so anxious he should include in his portrait.

He hurried off to the chief of police and told that worthy what he suspected—namely, that the barmy he had visited contained the long lost jewel of the English lady. Inquiries were at once set on foot with extraordinary results. The jeweler in the bazaar confessed to having given years ago to quite insignificant sum for the jewel, which he had bought from a stable-man in the employ of a neighboring rajah. The stablemen was sought for and turned out to be none other than a famous English cracksman who had apparently turned honest, but who, nevertheless, confessed to having been the thief of the jewel that had so miraculously discovered.—Pearson's Weekly.

SERMON
—FROM—
SHAKESPEARE

(Copr. 1909 by Brandt Carnerton Co. 1.18.)
Hate war doth breed a habit in a man? Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act IV. Sc. 3

There is nothing peculiarly original in the thought, "How war doth breed a habit in a man." It is the manner in which it is stated that attracts. Prize, earliest times experience has made men realize that continuous practice of an act tends to make action spontaneous and unconscious. Shakespeare has taken this world-old thought and crystallized it into a sentence which compels the attention of the most careless reader. In the word "breed" there is the Shakespeare touch. Character is but the child of practice. Men are what they are largely through their earliest acts, which in time, have become habits giving permanent stamp to their character. "The child is father to the man." Why? From the time of his incomprehensible childhood the individual has been getting this or that—following good or evil courses, and to the end he has become vicious or virtuous. The idle man has been made idle by neglecting his duties in early life, the energetic worker has become so by the practice of industry.

Habits are necessary. They are great time-savers. If we were compelled to pause at every act and consider whether or not it were being performed correctly it would be possible to accomplish but little during the short span of life. A thousand acts are each day done unconsciously by every individual. The importance of forming correct habits, form these habits, be self-evident. A habit once formed is as difficult to break as it is to make a bent tree grow straight. As the twig is bent the tree is inclined, so the child sets the character of the mature man is moulded. If there are moral blots born into the world, it is because their ancestors had formed evil habits which have descended to the children. The prisons of every land are filled with men who have been made what they are by the selfish acts, the cruel acts, the vicious acts, of their childhood days. The thief has been bred by "mere" is his blood he has covered objects and, not being forced to resist temptation, stealing has become a habit. Kleptomania is a mental state occasioned by the practice of theft. On the other hand generosity is a condition achieved by the practice of unselfish acts. Men can become saints or devils. It largely depends on their boyhood training.

What "mere" is to individuals is really to be seen in the movements of raw recruits and veterans. The former performs their evolutions awkwardly, clumsily, self-consciously; the latter march and turn and wheel with admirable precision—at the word of command, from habit they obey. Drill has been necessary to bring them to soldiery perfection. Life is a battle to fight to the best advantage; drill and discipline are essential.

We speak of skill. What after all is skill but correct habit? Practice makes perfect; and by constant practice the aggressive become the master workman. But some workmen possess by nature a higher degree of skill than others. This, too, may be due to habit. In certain communities artisans have a skill in peculiar craftship that cannot be equalled elsewhere. The stonecutters of Sheffield illustrate this. Way is it? They are the children of stonecutters; their fathers and grandfathers have been stonecutters. The habits of their ancestors have been inherited. Mentally and physically they possess a heredity advantage over workmen in more recent communities. Habit thus leaves room for growth. The mind and body through unconscious action are free to advance to greater heights of perfection.

Evil habits once formed are not easy to break. Humble in his origin or to arouse his mother to a virtuous course of action points out the only way in which vice can be vanquished. "Refrain," he says, "and that shall lend a kind of easiness

To the next abstinence; the next more easy;
For use can almost change the stamp of nature,
And either lay the devil, or throw him out
With wonderous potency."

The drunkard is the offspring of "use." Frequent practice has become habit. We cure drunkenness artificial aids, purely physical, have been resorted to. In the majority of cases they fail. But there is a sure cure—the exercise of the will combined with the practice of virtuous acts. The evil stimulus craved by body and mind must have a substitute. The only safe substitute is "actions fair and good." That an evil habit can be cast out without a battle. The battle, then, it is necessary to erect strong walls around the citadel of the soul, to keep alert guards in the watch-towers. The enemy will return and endeavor to undermine the walls, to scale the citadel in times of darkness. The surest safeguards against sin, evil habits, are good deeds, generous acts. Heredity, habits of ancestors, environment, habits of neighbors; practice—all play their part and tend to virtue or vice. To the last analysis character is the sum of a man's virtuous or vicious habits.

Indisputable Figures Show That Local Option Does Prohibit Effectually.

It used to be common to hear men say that they would not vote for local option because "just as much liquor is drank under prohibition as with open saloons," and there were men who prophesied that this would be the result in Allegan county if local option carried. It is impossible to find such a man today, or, if one should be heard making such averment he would excite laughter.

There were given out to the press this week some statistics of importance at Grand Haven which let a flood of light upon this matter and show a surprising decrease of beer shipments in this state from Milwaukee. Grand Haven naturally is the largest point in Michigan for beer from Milwaukee. It is significant the beer imports for the year just closed are only about twelve per cent of those for 1908 while the difference is still more marked when the year's imports are compared with those of 1907. This year the total importation of beer aggregated but twenty-nine tons. In 1908 the total was 229, and in 1907 it was 289 tons.

Ottawa county is not "dry" but much of the "dry" territory in western Michigan depended on Grand Haven for its supply of beer from Milwaukee—in fact some ninety per cent, of Milwaukee's beer sold in Michigan probably came through Grand Haven. The gradual spreading of the "dry" territory is believed to have been seldom in the Union Army during the Civil War. Any one who has information in regard to them will confer a favor by writing to the undersigned.

—The public is cordially invited to attend a hot supper given by the Rebecca Stars at their dining hall Feb. 15th, from 5:30 to 7 p. m. Supper 25c. A good time is expected.

—We are in receipt of a card from Frank P. Gelken and wife, of Pellston, dated New Orleans. Mr. and Mrs. Gelken were just starting for San Antonio, Texas on their way to California for a winter trip.

—The question of coming under the ceiling law is being considered in the following 23 counties in the state on April 4: Arenac Baraga, Branch, Cass, Charlevoix, Clare, Gladwin, Gogebic, Houghton, Iosco, Iron, Kalamazoo, Keweenaw, Lake Mackinac, Macomb, Marquette, Monroe, Montmorency, Ontonagon, Ottawa, Saginaw and St. Joe. The remaining 80 counties of the state already nominating by primary.

—Just make a note of this: The writer of this item is just about as early a bird as any office or counter slave in Charlevoix, and he has not yet reached lindge street early enough in the morning to catch the mercury at zero or below, and he always takes a peek at Forrest Blanchard's thermometer on his way to the editorial desk. Some one tells us that on two mornings, before the light came creeping over the eastern hills, he caught the mercury hovering about the zero mark, but it climbed upward rapidly, as if ashamed of itself.

—Most of us have read in the classics of the "Spartan Mother," who gave her son to her country. Well, Charlevoix has a young Spartan—a relative of Gov. Hilsdon, of this city, who is himself a native of the historic city of Athens. The lad of whom we speak is John Lagges, aged about 14 years, a native of Sparta in the north of Greece. He left the Hellenic city about a year ago and his English does not flow as freely as the delicious soils which he serves at the Gibbs parlors; but he is attending school and is deeply interested in his studies, which are yet chiefly confined to the alphabet. He is a bright lad, with a good face, which lights up pretfully when you ask him how he likes being a young Amerikan. Spartan blood is good red blood, and, who knows but what a drop or two of it came from the veins of the Spartan dame of the long ago.

—Ice cutters should remember that they must live up to the state law regarding cutting twenty feet within 12 rod of where they are cutting ice, also to mark place when leaving it. The barriers must be placed in all four sides to protect people from crossing the hole where ice was taken out. The penalty is heavy in case of failure to observe the law, and those failing to comply will be haled into court.

—Married, Monday morning, February 7, at St. Mary's Assumption church, in this city, by Rev. Father Anastasius Hibode, Mr. Hobert Mazill to Miss Josephine Gerbrick, both of Charlevoix. John Zettler was best man and Miss Anna Madill bridesmaid. Mr. and Mrs. Madill left on the morning train for Grand Rapids on a short wedding trip. They will reside in Charlevoix, where a pleasant home is already provided on the south terrace.

—Grand Rapids Herald: "Potatoes are moving a little more freely, with 25 cents a bushel as the ruling price in the Grand Rapids market and 20 to 22 cents north of Reed City," said Frederick W. Rinyan of Lovewood & Rinyan, potato buyers. "During the blizzard period shipments naturally fell off and prices advanced 6 to 8 cents, but traffic is again normal and the quotations have dropped. We are handling about 60 carloads a week, but would handle more were it not that the farmers are still holding back in the hope of higher prices. Two thirds of the crop is still in the hands of the farmers and unless I am greatly mistaken we will see 10 cent potatoes along in April when the farmers find they must sell or take a total loss."

—There was installed last week in the ice cream parlors of Geo. Glados, Hattie's block, what is unquestionably the finest soda fountain and serving counter this side of Grand Rapids. The plant cost a little over $2,000. The fountain proper, unlike most of these dispensers of sweetness, stands on the serving counter—a most beautiful silver trimmed shaft of marble—while the counter the wall stands a magnificent creation of mahogany and plate glass, trimmed with ornate metal tracery. The fountain is supplied with every conceivable modern auxilliary, in the way of syrup receptacles, ice boxes, etc. The outfit is fourteen feet long, and it embraces 168 inches of artistic beauty.

—The ice harvest was opened Monday morning by Harry Whitbread, who will pack a larger amount than ever to meet the steadily increasing summer demand. The Booth Co. will begin the work next Monday morning. Local supply summer hotels will be in full swing in the ice harvest by this time next week. For a month the ice harvest here will be of large proportions.

—It looks like a repetition of last winter's record in the matter of Beaver Island mail communications. The mail carriers left St. James last Sunday afternoon for Cross Village, but returned after reaching Hog Island—water taking itself to the northward and eastward. The cold snap of Sunday night and Monday tempted them to make another effort Monday afternoon, but returned to St James again Tuesday night. Only the stiffest sort of a freeze-up can bridge the channel this late, and it looks as if our Island neighbors will have to wait for spring before they can get their mail, of which there is a good day-load waiting here and at Cross Village.

The Same Old Lie.

Cadillac News and Express:—There have been received in Cadillac through recent days hundreds of pamphlets which are being sent out under saloon league auspices assuming to show the deplorable state of affairs at Battle Creek alleged to have been brought about through local option. Direct information from Battle Creek shows that these pamphlets are of the same status as those which pretended to show conditions in Cadillac one year ago. It will be remembered that the Cadillac pamphlets represented practical forgery, fraud and perjury on the part of the interests responsible for them, but they did not represent Cadillac or its people or its business experience. In the circulars from Cadillac gotten out by the saloon league last year the names of persons were attached to statements which were promptly declared to be deliberate falsehoods. These names were used without permission of the persons to whom they applied and statements were made of which they had no knowledge. This is the same sort of campaign that is being made for the saloon business in many counties in Michigan. Impending prosecutions and falsehood and forgery. In a statement just received from Battle Creek which is vouched for by one of the best known business men of that city it is shown that the saloon league circular deliberately misrepresents the situation there. There have been fewer arrests made during the period of local option there than in any recent similar period. Real estate values have not been injured—one district of Battle Creek which during the saloon regime was referred to as the "bad lands" has been cleaned and made desirable property and its value has increased from ten to twenty-five percent. Many business men in the city who last spring opposed local option now openly announce their favor for that policy. Not one state element made in the saloon league pamphlet represents an actual situation in Battle Creek. Its publication will have the same effect that followed the Cadillac matter sent out from Cadillac last spring. It further illustrates the intent of the saloon forces in Michigan to use any sort of means to criminate and perpetuate the liquor business, but the methods are so transparent as to leave no a most decided effect in an exactly opposite direction.

Ironton News: Mr. and Mrs. Grant Harrison started today for a western trip, which will take them to Los Angeles first, and from there to San Francisco. They plan to return after several weeks in the far west, by way of Salt Lake City and Denver, where short visits of pleasure will be paid.

IMPORTANT MEETING

The Republican County Committee Meet and Open Campaign.

Evidently the republican county committee does not propose to wait until the candidates are nominated before getting the party into line for active work.

The committee was called to order by Chairman Dow in his city Tuesday afternoon, and a county republican club was organized with the following officers:

President—H. I. McMillan, East Jordan.

Secretary—F. P. Robbins, Hoyne Falls.

Treasurer—L. S. See, Charlevoix.

A vice president was elected for each township and ward. Those from Charlevoix are John Nordrum, Carl Wardrop and W. E. Parmalee; township, A. Reynolds; Eveline, Sam Alexander; Hayes, Fred Smith; Marion, Wm. Straw; Norwood, Samuel B. Chase. Executive committee, J. H. Mitford, Frank Blair, A. J. Stroud. On by laws,—Roy Lorraine, F. W. Mayne, Ramsey.

The committee adjourned to meet again at the call of the president. It is unofficially understood that there will in the near future, have a banquet meeting by one of the committees, to make the event the rallying point for vigorous work. It is intended that clubs shall be organized in every township.

It is well that the committee has thus taken time by the forelock. The republicans of Charlevoix county have never been compelled to fight a defensive campaign that involved a tangible challenge of its administrative record to its long period of control of county affairs. It has done mighty little that requires explanation or apology. In the coming campaign, so far as county affairs are concerned, the record of the past two years is what the party will go before the people on, and on this it can look every voter and tax payer squarely in the eye.

There are National and State issues that must be considered, and in these Charlevoix county republicans may be depended upon to do their full share in rolling up the usual majority.

The committee proposes to make the campaign an aggressive one from the start, and that is why the local is being mapped thus early.

Change of Lecturer.

Early this week a telegram was received from Dr. Tikes, who was have lectured here Friday night, that because of the death of his mother he would be obliged to cancel his dates at Charlevoix. Steps were taken immediately to secure a speaker to take that date, and Hon. Carl D. Thompson, of Milwaukee, has been secured and will lecture on the subject "The Fulfillment of Democracy."

No admission will be charged to holders of season tickets, but a general admission of 35c for others. It is also hoped that Dr. Tikes can be with us later in the season.

Hon. Tompson is a man very highly recommended. Senator La Follette says of him, on his Chautauqua course of 1909 it spoke to many of the same audiences which had been addressed earlier in the season by Hon. Carl D. Thompson. I found every where nothing but words of the highest praise and approval of his work. Even the most critical expressed themselves deeply impressed with the clearness and force of his presentation and the high level of his ideas."

Demand Without a Reason.

The Traverse City Eagle prints a leading editorial under the heading "Time for Burrows to Retire."

About the only reason the editor gives for the retirement of the senior senator is that he is "old and infirm." Mr. Burrows is older than some who wear the toga, but the infirmity charge remains to be proven. There is ample evidence that the Senator is far from infirm.

Was Hoar infirm? Were Morgan and Hetine in their dotage when they were returned to the senate to complete their life work? All of them were older than Burrows, and their powerful influence was felt to the last.

It is not time for Burrows to retire! There is not a member of the American senate whose influence in large questions is more potently felt than that of J. C. Burrows.

There is not a man in that august body who is more watchful of the interests of his state, or whose influence therefor has shown better results.

ABOUT LAKE TROUT

Illinois Fish Commissioner's Report Discusses the Subject.

From the same source as the article on whitefish in our last week's issue we take the following interesting information relative to lake trout:

Between 1880 and 1890 many fishermen; failed, some moved further north, where whitefish were still plentiful, and others started in catching our next most valuable food fish, the trout. This fish is more wary and never will be caught away as fast or as completely as the whitefish. There are ten distinct species, the Mackinaw or reef and the deep water trout. The Mackinaw is a shoal water fish, and has its feeding grounds in from six to thirty fathoms of water. Twenty five years ago they were very numerous in the north half of Lake Michigan, where their main breeding grounds are, but now are in decreasing gradually from year to year.

They grow to a large size, have large heads, which are cut off when the fish are sold for headless or steak trout. They spawn in the shoal water, rock in from six to twenty-five fathoms of water, feed on all other fish, and have a decided preference for whitefish.

The deep water trout is mostly found in the south half of Lake Michigan, in from twenty-five to sixty fathoms of water, and is smaller than the Mackinaw trout. Its average weight is about three pounds. Years ago, when the waters were crowded with whitefish, many of these fellows would feed on these fish solely, and from the rich food grow to enormous size. It was nothing uncommon for the fishermen to bring in with their catches trout weighing forty and even sixty pounds each.

For at least six months each year the deep trout are caught. They rise from the bottom, feed and roam all over the lake. Like its brother, the Mackinaw, the deep water trout is very voracious and will snap at anything that swims or crawls, even wallowing bones thrown overboard from steamboats and vessels, which are indigestible, and which are found in them after being caught. Trout in comparison with our finest food fish, stands shipping well and millions of pounds are distributed over our western states and as far east as the Atlantic coast. The Mackinaw and deep water trout spawn from about the 20th of October until along the forepart of December, but instead of depositing their eggs on the honey-comb rocks like the Mackinaw, so far out in the lake in deep water, from forty five to sixty fathoms, and deposit their eggs on clay bottom. Hatches from these eggs never drive these fish from their spawning grounds, and undoubtedly a large percentage of eggs fertilize.

In from six months and eight thousand eggs each, and from the way they have been taken out of the lake in the last twenty five years we can safely figure that at least one-eighth of the eggs fertilize and come to life. Whereas the whitefish spawn in the most stormy period of the season on ladder rock, commonly called round-heads, and in very shoal water, in from two to ten fatcoms. They gather around the edges of these reefs on sandy bottoms from about the 10th of October on, and from about the 15th to the 25th of November will rush on the rocks all at once. If the weather is fair, they will deposit their eggs, which takes from three to four weeks, but if sudden and heavy storm sets in, which happens very often, these fish will placed over, and will not return again until another year, and the result is a total loss, as not one in twenty thousand will be fertilized.

It has been proved, and is known fact, that where the eggs are taken, fertilized and sent to hatcheries, 75 per cent come to life, and can be planted in the waters under the most favorable conditions. The tiller of the soil must sow the plant in order to harvest; with

PARIS FORCES BUSY SAVING BIG BUILDINGS

As Slime Sweeps Away from Streets Men Battle to Save Structures in Peril.

A FEVER EPIDEMIC UNLIKELY

Physicians Warn Residents Against Occupancy of Homes Until Premises Are Disinfected.

With the subsiding of the waters of the Seine, the situation in Paris and its suburbs did not immediately improve. Sewers in all quarters have burst and flooded the basements, rendering further property loss. As the flood waters receded, and the slime swept away from the streets, men have battled to save imperiled buildings. Physicians have warned residents against occupancy of homes until the premises are thoroughly disinfected and it is thought the feared fever epidemic is unlikely.

Rising in the center of an ancient gulf of the sea, Paris has been inundated by the waters of distant mountain torrents and of nearer streams, all of which together drain a vast area. The Seine is commonly free from floods, owing largely to the permeable character of the rocks underlying the greater portion of its extensive valley. Recently its tributaries became enormously swollen by continuous rains and melting snow. From the mountains the waters in the Morvan, discharging into the Seine near the gates of Paris, the flooded streams were in many' courses of perhaps the great.

Paris in a week's time was moved back to the public eye and to its comforts and conveniences go. The only bridge open across the Seine for foot passengers was that built by Louis XIV. Horses supplied all transports. Boats ferried people all the light and the food probably was even less varied than that in the middle ages. While the suffering in the lower districts of the flooded suburbs was beyond description, the middle classes were no less affected. Hundreds who are known to fame for wealth and ancient lineage were little better off than their poorer fellow sufferers. The extent of the disaster has so overwhelmed every one that no man from the president of the republic down, cut results has had enough. much less report it in detail. As an example of the sitter, it took a wager for a bottle holding a quart of hennessy cost $1, and candles sold at 15 cents apiece.

The fact that there sits upon a crust of earth, over vast systems of sewers and subterranean streams, added materially to the danger of the situation. The caving in of street, became an alarming feature of the situation. To what extent the water rushing through the underground passages will yet break down the foundations of the city is a problem of the greatest gravity. While the torrents have proved a most dreadful enemy, the mystery of what may happen below the surface weighs upon the city.

There is good reason to hope that the ruin wrought by the flood will not be nearly as great as that which the alarm of the whole world imagines for the beautiful capital of France. At best, however, the loss and suffering will be enormous.

EX-AMBASSADOR DRAPER DIES.

Governor Who Held Post at Home Passes Away In Washington.

Brigadier General William F. Draper, former American ambassador to Italy, died at his home in Washington after prolonged illness, aged 65 years. He was born in Lowell, Mass., in 1842, and served in the Union army from 1861 to 1866. In 1893 he was a presidential elector and he served as a Republican member of the 57th, 58th and 59th Congresses, declining a third nomination. In 1897 he was appointed ambassador to Italy, holding that post until 1903.

PROPOSED NEW STATE.

California Section, Slighted by Sons, Seeks Union with Oregon.

Agitation for the creation of a proposed new state, to be called Siskiyou, out of northern California and southern Oregon, has reached such a stage that a convention has been called to meet at Yreka, Cal., on March 15. Alleged slight of this territory by the more populous districts of the state has been the cause of dissatisfaction culminating in this movement.

U. S. PLANS $5,000,000 HARBOR.

Major Ross Gives Hints on Chicago Project to Be Made Public Soon.

That a complete report of the plans, observations and recommendations of the corps of government engineers who have been at work for the past two months mapping out a scheme for the harbor development of Chicago will be ready in about thirty days was the announcement made by Major Thomas H. Ross, in charge of the federal engineering department in the city.

The undertaking contemplates the construction of a huge custom house, water extending approximately about a mile and a half from south to south and located about two miles from shore. In addition, a large amount of dredging will be done, and when the undertaking has been completed, it is asserted, the total cost easily will reach $5,000,000.

"STAND OR FALL TOGETHER."

Miners' Leaders Determined to Ask Increase of Ten Per Cent.

"Stand or fall together" was the sentiment of the convention of the United Mineworkers of America when it stood shoulder to shoulder delegates of the prospective strike of the bituminous coal miners. Union officials declared that the bituminous miners are determined to demand an increase of wages of 10 per cent or more, that no one district organization shall sign the uniform wage contract till all districts shall sign, and if a strike is inevitable in one or more districts, all shall strike. Francis Feehan, president of the Western Pennsylvania district, said his conviction was that the organization should issue an ultimatum that a strike in all districts will be called on April 1 if an increase of wages of more than 10 per cent be not given, to go into effect on that date.

TERRIFIC MINE BLAST DESTROYS 149 LIVES

Underground Horror Occurs in Primero Pit of Colorado Fuel and Iron Company.

79 BODIES ARE FOUND IN A PILE

Victims Die in Fight for Freedom—Women Wail at Mouth of Pit.

More than 100 men were killed by a terrific explosion in the Primero mine of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, Primero, Colo., at 4.30 the other afternoon.

The bodies of seventy-nine victims were laid in a mass at the foot of the air shaft shortly after midnight. When the explosion occurred the men evidently made a rush to escape through the air shaft and were suffocated in their battled with each other for freedom.

It is shown by the timekeeper's records that there were 149 men in the mine at the time of the explosion. The main shaft of the mine is completely wrecked. Only one man has been found alive. He is badly injured but has not been identified. Three men were killed at the mouth of the main slope by the force of the explosion.

Both fans with which the mine is equipped were shattered and it was impossible to enter the mine until they were repaired. As soon as the fans were repaired, General Superintendent J. F. Thomisson and a rescue party entered by the main shaft but not were unable to reach the main slope which is completely blocked. A party equipped with oxygen helmets replaced this party. The workmen were driven out through the air shaft, and were searched for more bodies.

Miners were rushed to Primero from Trinidad, Segundo, Starkville, Segundo and Tokeville, and labored frantically to clear the main shaft, relieving each other every few minutes.

It is impossible to determine how far the main shaft has caved, and it may be days before the shaft is cleared and the total death list known. Most of the victims are Slavs and Hungarians. Electrician Will Helm is among the missing.

The camp is a scene of indescribable horror tonight. Every able-bodied man is taking his turn with pick and shovel to clear the shaft. The women and children, kept back by ropes, gathered about the shaft, weeping and calling wildly for their husbands and fathers.

Members of the first rescue party say that the effect of the explosion under ground is indescribable.

BISHOP FOSS. 76. DIES.

Taken from Street Car to Hospital in Philadelphia.

Bishop Cyrus D. Foss, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died in Philadelphia the other night. He was stricken with paralysis in a street car on March 15. His wife and son, Cyrus D. Foss, Jr., and a daughter, Mrs. George M. Wood, were summoned to his bedside. When he was stricken Bishop Foss, who is 76 years of age, was found to be unconscious in the right side. Cyrus David Foss was born in Kingston, N. Y. in 1841. He was graduated from Wesleyan University twenty years later. After serving in various pastorates, the general conference of the Methodist Church in 1884 elected him a bishop. From that time to 1908 Bishop Foss made his home in Minneapolis. In 1908 he went to Philadelphia. He was in charge of the Rio Grande in the year 1893 organizing many Methodist churches there. During 1897 and 1898 he was in India and Malaysia preaching the gospel. In 1906 the bishop was retired from active work.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Chicago Trade says:

"Business activity again presents a satisfactory volume, there being substantial gains in payments through the banks and increasing production and distribution in the leading industries. With the improving weather transportation extends and more prompt deliveries of commodities make easier collections at western points.

"The January clearance sales here and in the country have been unusually successful, low temperatures insuring much buying of winter apparel and other necessaries, and there now is a gratifying depletion of general merchandise to encourage free buying of spring and summer lines. Buyers have arrived in large numbers and their operations stimulated the markets for dry goods, woolens, clothing, footwear, men's furnishings, furniture and food products. The markets for raw supplies remain active, with prices firm in lumber, metals and wool. Offerings of hides and leather are promptly absorbed without much variation in values.

"Outdoor construction makes progress and there is a strong demand for building materials required for the spring months. The iron and steel bookings run into large tonnage.

"Bank clearings for the week exceed those of the corresponding week in 1909 by 11 per cent, and compare with $205,562,488 in 1908. The discount rate for commercial paper reflects further easing, the rate being bought under 5 per cent.

"Business failures in the Chicago district number 31, as against 32 last week, 35 in 1909 and 37 in 1908. Those in the United States are 340, against 347 last week, 379 in 1909 and 347 in 1908. Canada reports 40 this week and 10 in 1909."

NEW YORK.

Gross currents in demand render a general characterization difficult. Wholesale and jobbing trade in spring goods tends to expand, travelers on the road are meeting with better orders and the outlook for the future in those lines is optimistic. Retail trade, following the activity engendered by January clearance sales, is quieter, preparing for the further advance of the winter season. Filling-in orders from retailers to jobbers are moderate. Manufacturing industry is busily employed, with large orders unfilled.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with Jan. 27 were 295, as against 275 last week, 311 in the 4th week of 1909, 359 in 1908 and 347 in 1907 and 379 in 1906.

Business failures in Canada number forty-three, which compares with forty last week and forty-two for the corresponding week last year.—Bradstreet's.

THE WORLD'S SHORTEST and GREATEST ORATION

Executive Mansion.

Washington, — 1863

Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth, upon this continent, a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of it, as a final resting place for those who gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate — we can not consecrate — we can not hallow — this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have hallowed it, far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here.

It is rather for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us — that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion — that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom — and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

Abe Lincoln

This GETTYSBURG ADDRESS, November 19, 1863.

FACSIMILE of the ORIGINAL FIRST VERSION AS IT WAS WRITTEN by LINCOLN HIMSELF

HIS VALENTINES.

To Maud I'll send a valentine
All fringed, lacey and divine
She's such a sweet sweetheart of mine
Tom gifts like these will be in place
Much sweeter than the lace you are.
My sweetheart Maud will prize them.

To my old sweetheart, grandma dear,
I'll send a pretty, refined card
Contained not mention forever
Somewhere the words "I love you."
No matter! Sight's slightest
Will bring back to her my love.

For quiet May I'll send some lace
A pretty book to read forever
Or some pretty, refined card (or fond)
To many I'll send many rhymes;
To Ethel I'll send some, too, well,
To her whose name I will not tell,

Whose tender eyes before me shine,
Whose sweet lips I long to touch and kiss,
I dare not write a valentine.
I breathe, instead, a trembling prayer
(So dear she is, so far above me)
And send her, silently, my heart!

St. Valentine's Day.

The god of love has a day in this month. Cupid celebrates St. Valentine's day, when hearts are tossed and arrows are flying promiscuously about. St. Valentine was a Roman priest who suffered martyrdom in the third century A.D. He is a saint of most amiability and of a very gentle disposition, as well as the lads and lassies. He is a grave way in role of priestly function. Gibbons says of him: "The apostle of the Foules," when they met together on this day, to chose them hall thy returning day, good St. Valentine! Thy name is great in the rubric of the saints, and thou art beloved in any other father in the calendar; not crowned with martyrdom, like St. Austin, whom all mothers bless; nor Origen, who hated all mothers; nor Cyprian, who hated all fathers; but crowned with St. Valentine, attended with thousands of little lovers, and the air is filled with the flies of love-filled wings. Singing Cupids are thy harbingers and thy precursors, and instead of the crosier, the mystical arrow is borne before thee. Mysterious messenger at thou, oh, thou immortal Go-Between!"

Hearts on Install.

Too much credit can not be said of Mr. Lincoln's uniform meekness and kindness of heart, but his temper could be provoked on occasion.

Among the callers at the White House one day was an officer who had been cashiered from the service. He had prepared an elaborate defense of himself, which he consumed much time in reading to the President. When he had finished Mr. Lincoln replied that even upon his own statement of the case the judge would not warrant executive interference, and dismissed the crestfallen the man with a smile.

A few days afterward he again called upon the President and received cordially the same ground. For a third time he succeeded in forcing himself into the presence of Mr. Lincoln, who with great fortuitous liberal a reply to another recital of his case, to its conclusion, but made no reply. The officer looked at the President a moment and then burst out:

"Well, I see that you are fully determined not to do me justice."

This was aggravating even for Mr. Lincoln. Manifesting, however, no more feeling than that indicated by a slight compression of the lips, he very gently arose, left the room, got a package of paper he held in his hand, and then suddenly setting the defaulter officer by the coat collar, he marched him forcibly to the door and pushed him into the hall, saying:

"I give you fair warning never to show yourself in this room again. In my case you have not been unjust, but in this case you have, but not insult."

THE OLD VALENTINE.

I have it still, the years have fled,
And she is numbered with the dead;
Once more upon my desk it lies,
With love-light in its dreamy eyes;
And while I read its simple rhyme,
I feel my old heart beating time;
"The rose is red, the violet's blue
No sniffle can cut our love in two."

One winter morning, long ago,
It came to me across the snow,
A little messenger in white,
Though cold of cote—one heart's delight
Methought I see the golden curls
The eyes that look me in their pearls;
And from the post, almost divine,
She speaks through this old Valentine.

Aye, from the past so deeply veiled,
Beyond whose mists our barks have sailed,
Stealth forth a hand that seems to write,
"Love this some old year twelfth,
As once—twas with hand that homely rhyme,
So mercilessly handled—I'd be mine."
The rose is red, the violet's blue,
No sniffle can cut our love in two."

I wonder if beyond the blue,
Just where the star lie are and sow,
The sweetheart of the olden time
Tempest-tossed, the Valentine thrown,
Like that which once before my love,
With mir-rich in her hand and their
It must be so for I to-day,
Have lost a valentine from far away.

Lincoln and the Southerner.

The Hon. George H. White, a former Congressman from North Carolina, has an interesting story about Lincoln in the spring of 1861. Mr. White and two other young Southerners, one of whom was his father, were attending school in Washington. The morning the news of the firing on Fort Sumter reached them, they decided that it was their duty to return at once to their homes in the South to cast their fortunes with the Southern cause. Late that afternoon, being public, as Mr. Lincoln was in the habit of doing, young White proposed that they call on the President and see what sort of man the President really was.

"No," said the tall fellow, "I for one won't go near the ogre."

"Hut," urged the third youth, who also was a Southerner, "Lincoln is going to be war, and Mr. Lincoln will undoubtedly be President, and we really owe it to ourselves to know something about him."

Some time followed from the tall fellow:

"Now look here," broke in young White, after the argument had gone on for a spell, "I know that you are afraid to go that reception to-night, and you are going with me."

The upshot of the matter was that the three young men went to the reception and lined up with several hundred others to greet President Lincoln. All the time the tall fellow stood his ground behind his friends, with his hands held resolutely behind his back.

"I'll go," he had finally said, "but I'll never shake hands with him."

Slowly the three Southerners passed up to the receiving line and the tall fellow suddenly found himself face to face with the President. His two friends had hurriedly shaken hands with the President and had passed on, leaving the tall fellow, who had stuck to his guns, all by himself, with his hands held resolutely behind his back.

"I'll go," he had finally said, "but I'll never shake hands with him."

Slowly the three Southerners passed up to the receiving line and the tall fellow suddenly found himself face to face with the President. His two friends had hurriedly shaken hands with the President and had passed on, leaving the tall fellow, who had stuck to his guns, all by himself, with his hands held resolutely behind his back.

Across the and face of the President flashed a look of surprise and inquiry, and then a merry twinkle leaped to his eyes, as he half-divined the cause of the slight.

"Just a moment, young man," he said, as the tall fellow was passing on. "How will you vote?"

"I believe I can match you," retorted the Southerner, and then and there, before the assembled throng, he turned back to shake with the Southerner the hand which of the two was the taller. The President commented the incident.

"Young man, I can't match you," the President was forced to admit; "but," he added, putting out his hand again and smiling kindly into the eyes of the young fellow, "I never let anybody taller than I go by so without shaking hands."

And the Southerner, completely overcome, took the extended hand. It was an event again speak till of Mr. Lincoln.—Youth's Companion.

Women as Woman.

Tribute it may seem, the verse penned by Lincoln when he was 19, at the time of his sister Sarah's marriage to Aaron Grigsby, may give some insight into his lifelong estimate of the attitude of man toward woman. These are the concluding verses:

"The woman one not taken
From Adam's feet we see;
So man not above her,
Nor she beneath him be.

"The woman was not taken
From Adam's head we know,
To show she should not rule him—
This evidently so.

"The woman she was taken
From under Adam's side
So she must be protected
From injuries and insult."

TIME MAKES IT BRIGHTER.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

THE GLORY OF THE NAZARENE.

By Rev. W. E. Tilroe.

And we beheld His glory.—John 1:14.

That a citizen of the earth, some nineteen centuries ago, a certain Syrian Jew, one Jesus of Nazareth, lived a life that was a life of glory, is the thing that is here affirmed. Other things are said, but our matter of talk is this. It is not a theological vision, but a plain record. The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld His glory.

The glory of the Christ life may be seen earthed, mentally, in that it is the only one of its kind. It was a unique life. Jesus Christ alone, was "Only begotten." In all the ages He has no fellow. When Napoleon said "Not one is like Him," he had this vision. It is of the genius of great men to carve a niche for itself, to fly to its own orbit, to evermore walk lonely. Moses, Aristotle, Shakespeare, square are memories of the forgotten, and live among the dead. So there was never another like the Son of Mary. Reverence is born of respect, and worship of the child may well begin by finding Him among the solitary few. History can neither be written nor read without mention of His name. Jesus of Nazareth is even now, lord of the centuries.

The glory of the Christ life is seen also in transcendence. It is a biography evermore parting from man and carried out of their vision. "The man comprehended it not." "The world knew Him not." "His own received Him not." Men have Christ not only with mortal opposition, but with mortal indifference. They reject Him as surely that they are little as they are w

A meeting of the directors of the Western Michigan Development bureau has been called for February 9, when plans for 1910 will be outlined and the by laws adopted.

Willis Hoffman, aged 45, employed at White's camp six, near Boyne Falls, was killed by a G. R. & I. train, January 26, while engaged in hauling water. He was a single man and lived at Hoffman's lake, a few miles from where the accident took place.

Kalkaska county has decided to join the Western Michigan Development bureau. At a meeting Thursday, E. C. Hast, one of the directors, explained the objects and aims of the bureau and it was decided to raise the necessary money and receive a part in the benefits of the bureau.

The Boyne City Journal is informed that an arrangement has been agreed upon by the board of Control and Mr. Swift of the Benham House, by which Mr. Swift will move out of the House today to his farm up on the hill. The affairs of the House will be in other hands for the present.

Frank Smith, of the peninsula, has developed an entirely new apple, which he has named "Smith's Favorite." The fruit is on the order of the Fanciness, though said to be of better quality and a better keeper. Mr. Smith has arranged with the Monroe Nursery to plant and bud two hundred trees for him.

Petoskey News: Fishermen's luck said some one yesterday morning when the people of this section awoke to see a large portion of ice gone from the bay and a number of fishermen's shanties gone with it. Some of the best adventurous ones are putting themselves on the back for not putting their shanties on the ice so early. Yesterday during nineteen shanties could be seen on the ice on the north side of the bay and nearly as many went out with the ice. The early bird catches the worm, but this time the early bird got caught. Some good catches of fish are reported for Sunday and Monday.

A tragedy occurred at Traverse City last week that invokes people of Acme and Milton townships who are known by the Progress readers. William Wesley Wethy, son of Ezra Wethy of Acme, met his wife, and then put two bullets in his own body and fell dead at her feet. The shooting occurred early in the morning while the woman was on her way to work. Mrs. Wethy will recover, the bullet passing through her cheek was deflected by the plate of her false teeth and was imbedded just the flesh and later extracted. Mrs. Wethy's maiden name was Carrie Peckham and she lived in Torch Lake. She first married a Mr. Clark and was married to Mr. Wethy four years ago, and was suing for a divorce.—Progress.

Hog money is being made in western Michigan growing cherries. Pages of facts and figures can be produced to prove there is no pleasanter nor surer way of getting ahead in this world than by growing big fat cherries. The income from a five-acre orchard well cared for trees will keep a family in comfortable circumstances; the returns from a ten-acre orchard will cause a bank account to become restless, and the returns from a twenty acre orchard will almost put its owner in the "big business" class. For example, James W. Markham of Lretanian county, in 1908 harvested 1,569 cases of cherries from his five-acre orchard. These cases sold at an average price of $1.40, which is better than $2,150. This a return of $430 to the acre. Every season since the tree began to bear, Mr. Markham has had a generous income.

Cadillac News and Express: It is already noticeable that Chase Osborn's candidacy for governor is being taken seriously by those who were not inclined to so take it a few weeks ago. Darling the past week or two Osborn has been taking part in political gatherings side by side with his same backers and his official honors and on each occasion the things he has said and his way of saying them have been pointed and potent. He does not ramble or generalize or talk of things the people of Michigan are not interested in. Osborn believes that the expenses of the state of Michigan should be reduced and he knows what he is talking about. At times he might be surprised one questioning candidate by telling him of money now being paid out of the state treasury under conditions not at all justifiable, born will not be asked the same question again by the same candidate.

The Fruit Grower's Association.

East Jordan, Mich., Feb. 2, 1910.

Editor of SENTINEL:

Dear Sir:—I herewith submit a report of the second meeting of the Charlevoix County Fruit Grower's Association and hope that you will be able to use it in next week's issue of your paper.

The second meeting of the Charlevoix County Fruit Grower's Association was called to order in the Votruba hall in East Jordan at 2:00 p. m. by the temporary chairman, Mr. W. P. Squier, with 60 farmers and fruit growers present.

After the reading of the minutes of the former meeting, the first order of business was the perfecting of a permanent organization and the following officers were elected to serve until Jan. 1, 1911.

President, W. P. Squier; vice presidents, Fred Wagner, A. J. Gidley, H. L. Olney; secretary, J. H. Milford; treasurer, D. S. Payne; directors, Martin Hotchkiss, A. P. Darbee, Wm. Withers, Jasper Warden, E. E. Stroud, L. F. Knowles, E. B. Ward.

It was decided to hold a meeting each month, alternating between Charlevoix, Boyne City and East Jordan.

The next meeting will be held in Charlevoix on the first Tuesday in March and one in Boyne City on the first Tuesday in April.

Pruning and spraying will be discussed at the meeting at Charlevoix and a subject for the next meeting will be decided upon at the Charlevoix meeting.

The dues of the association were placed at 50c per year.

In answer to the question, "What slope is best for fruit?" a prominent and successful fruit grower replied that the slope of the man was more important than the slope of the land and the farmers of Charlevoix County are determined to get the proper slope, hence the organization of this new society. Its aim is educational and every one who is interested in better farm methods, (and who is not,) is invited to become a member of the society and to attend the meetings and ask questions and take part in the discussions.

After the business of the meeting was concluded, the topic, "What Kinds of Fruit and What Varieties of Each Should Northern Michigan Attempt to Grow?" was taken up and discussed.

As the fruit tree agent is busy at this season, this was a very important topic. A suggestion was made that weask the legislature to pass a law permitting farmers to hang agents and nursery men who delivered trees that were not true to name. No committee was appointed to wait on our representative in the interests of such a law, but all were urged to be careful in this matter and to deal with the most responsible firms.

It will be impossible to mention here all the good points that were brought out in the discussion.

Mr. Withers of Marion says that he has too many varieties in his orchard. Says four good ones will be plenty for the average orchard. Likes King apple best. Names Snow, Wealthy, Wagner as a trio less as good ones. For an early apple, says that Duchess cannot be beaten.

He says that cherries are also a sure and profitable crop with him. Recommends Windsor and Smith's Bigarreau as best varieties for this section. Says that sweet cherries do well for local markets but that they will not ship. He will advise against planting too many of them.

He says he grows some peaches but finds it necessary to cut half of the years growth in order to get good peaches. Likes Alberta peaches better than any other variety he has.

Mr. Olney, of South Arm, is a peach grower. He mentioned the Kalamazoo as perhaps his best variety but has good words for the Fitzgerald, Early Crawford, Champion and Triumph.

Says Triumph will overbear unless properly thinned. Says that soil drainage is perhaps the most important thing in the selection of a site for a peach orchard. Mentioned the fact that even a slight depression in the land, though located on an elevation will form a receptacle into which the cold air will settle and kill both the buds and trees.

Says east slope is most likely to avoid late spring frosts but that he has no danger in making the crop too late in the fall for profit in this part of the state. Says that late varieties in particular should not be planted on north or east slopes.

Mr. Richardson made some amusing references to the Fruit Belt Apple, by having an orchard of 100 trees of this variety. Does not recommend planting this variety but says that if you have good trees of this sort to take good care of them and that there are always people to which you may derive a profit.

First, they are excellent trees to graft, be hardy and long lived. By grafting a variety that you know to be good on a Ben Davis you may soon have a very profitable tree.

Second, they are one of the surest bearers and by taking proper care of the fruit one is sure to reap good profits some time the next summer after the other apples are gone.

Mr. Burns of Marion, mentioned the Stark apple as one that would stand wind storms excellently on account of the fact that they grow on the inner parts of the tree. Willis not a grape grower he gave some interesting facts about the grape business and thinks that grapes will do well here and that they may be profitable raised.

Mr. Clark, of Eveline, gave a very interesting talk on the matter of tree breeding. Says that to graft from profitable bearing trees will add greatly to securing prolific trees.

He asked the opinion of some of the big shippers as to the best varieties for this locality and was told that Duchess, Wagner, Spitzenberg (must be thinned to be marketable) Spies and Greenings were perhaps the best varieties. Mentioned the McIntyre Red (similar to the Snow) as an excellent early variety.

Mr. Clark spoke favorably regarding the growing of small fruits and gave some statistics regarding the canning factory at Hart.

This factory paid to the farmers in the vicinity where located $1,200,000 (one million, two hundred thousand dollars) for small fruits during the past season. Charlevoix ought to have such a factory and as our land will do its part it is up to the farmer to look into the possibilities of the small fruit industry.

Many other good points were brought out but our report is already long and we will not mention more.

We hope to see a large attendance at Charlevoix on March 1 and know that these meetings will prove interesting and valuable to those who attend.

Respectfully submitted,

J. H. MILFORD, Secretary.

How a Dog Gallops

The gallop of the dog differs from that of the horse in that the sequence of foot fallings is rotary instead of diagonal. The order is the left fore, the right fore, the right hind, the left hind, and then again the left fore; but this sequence is often reversed, so that the order becomes left fore, the left hind, the right hind and the right fore, and then again the left fore.

A RESTRAINING HAND.

Its Action Followed by a Voice That Warns.

"Patrick H. McCarren once told me of a funny incident that happened in Texas," said a Brooklyn lawyer. "McCarren told that on his first visit to Rome, after he had seen the Colisseum and the Forum, he visited the Arc Cueli church, on the left of the Capitoline hill. He climbed the grand stairway leading to the church, the finest open air stairway in the world. He rapped back the heavy leather curtain, and, entering, he found a service in progress. So he put his hat on the marble floor at his side and took a seat.

"After ten minutes or so he decided he would go and remove his hat. At last, fist a restraining hand was laid on his, and he decided, in the name, of course, that some churches don't like people to leave in the middle of a service.

"Ten or fifteen minutes more passed. The service still continued. Senator McCarren got impatient and again reached for his hat. But again he was seen hand restrained him from the rear.

"A little later, however, the senator quite lost patience. This was, he told himself, an important service, of course. Nevertheless he did not prove to close his business, and it would hurt no one if he slipped out quietly.

"So a third time he reached for his hat, and the invisible hand a third time restrained him. He persisted, however. The silent hand pushed, and his silent hand pushed against it. But just as he was conquering in the struggle a voice said in good American:

"'Cheese it, boss; they're my hats you're taking.'"—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Mistaken Identity.

"Oh, doctor, he growls I so savagely I was sure he was mad even before he went on in such a biting way."

"I beg pardon, madam, but is your large dog or your small pet one you are speaking of?"

"Law, doctor, it isn't my dog I am talking about. It's my husband."—Illinois American.

Could Prove It.

A few days ago an alderman was glancing over the register at one of the local hotels to see if a friend of his was registered there. Near him stood a man who was holding on to the desk for dear life in a semicomatose fit attempt to unbrain his balance.

"I swear you little drunk pig mouth!" said the stranger, looking belligerently at the alderman.

"No; not in the least," replied the alderman, anxious to avoid the possibility of a row.

"Well, you'd know I was if I let go the desk," answered the man.—New York Star.

HIS NOSE WAS SAFE.

But His Nerves Were in a State of Cold Chill Gelatin.

"I was sitting on the veranda of a village hotel down in Georgia a good many years ago," said a veteran engineer, "and was lazily smoking one of the nicest smoking pipes you ever saw when out of the hall of my eye I saw that a load was down at the other end of the veranda and his pipe was in his mouth. They were a wild lot around there, and I couldn't tell whether he meant to shoot me or the pipe. The instant I saw the bowl of the pipe, however, and it seemed a good chance to load my nerves, I made up my mind to let him shoot and to pretend a carelessness that I'm selling you in the ten or fifteen seconds of waiting the event came out at every pore, and my heart pounded so that I felt it sort of tick at the bowl of the pipe. I heard the crack of the gun and knew that a bullet had passed through the pipe. I got a brave with my hands and feet and waited for a second bullet, and it went through the bowl after the first. I sat there until his fourth bullet had hit the pipe and knocked the bowl off the stem, and then he shouted unnatural up to me and laughingly said:

"'Excuse me, stranger, but I thought it was tobacco.'

"Same as you are,' I replied.

"My pipe hurt bits, but he was man enough to tell everybody about my nerve, and the boys chipped in sufficient money to make me a new fifty dollar pipe. Say, do you know what happened to me when I made an excuse to go upstairs after my old evaporator? I had no sooner got into my room than my knees gave way on me, collapsed on my spine and I'll be hanged if I didn't faint away and be there for ten minutes. It had suddenly occurred to me that the bowl of that pipe was only six inches from my nose while the fellow was firing at it, and I was so weak and yet got over much that my nasal organ now and then to now if it is safe."

CHAPTER VI.

Maurice was waiting for Jim after a somewhat abrupt interview with Mrs Dallas. He came the author, of Isabella was crossed out of her hundred indifferent and was anxious to know whether he accept Aylmer as his son-in-law.

"It is because that lady has some distrusts me that you subject" he said. "I wonder that an educated person should be influenced by the uncivilized instincts."

"Dido has nothing to do with my refusal," said the young man in some surprised; I have no objection to your marriage Dido, I do not do that. I don't wish Dido, I do not do that. I don't wish Dido, I do not do that. I don't wish Dido, you to marry my fortune.

"As a gentleman I must accept your dismissal, but I decline to give up Isabella."

"And I," echoed the girl, "swear to remain true to Maurice."

"You'll do nothing of the sort," said her mother bitterly. "I'm sick of you, even to think of that young man. You shall marry Aylmer, I tell you."

"Mr Aylmer?"

"Yes! Mr Aylmer."

"Do, do!" exclaimed Maurice, in an astonished tone. "You wish Isabella to marry him?"

"Yes! He loves Isabella much more than you do, and he asked permission—which you didn't—to pay his addresses to her. I consented, and as Mrs Dallas raised her voice, "he shall marry her!"

"I refuse to marry Mr Stacey," said Isabella, vehemently. "I hate him."

"That is no matter!" replied her mother coldly. "You must marry him!"

"Impossible!" repeated Maurice, with great indignation.

"Yes, Mr Aylmer! Must! Must! Must! If you want an explanation of that you can ask Major Jed."

"The Major! My guardian!" cried Aylmer quite thunderstruck. "It is he who—"

"Ask him!" was her further speech as she turned to the door, followed by Isabella.

Remaining himself to the inevitable, Maurice gave some chance at Isabella, and went outside with a heavy heart. Dido was standing upon the veranda, with her eyes shooting like two coals. Yet there was an ill-concealed expression of triumph in her face which Maurice, in his then disturbed and angry state of mind, could ill bear. He passed abruptly as he passed by her, and received a direct question.

"Why do you hate me, Dido?"

"Useless!" said she in a harsh voice. "Why! you black parrot!" muttered Maurice, scornfully, and turned upon his heel. As he reminded down the walk Dido clapped her hands together with great satisfaction, and began to sing to her tame bird. Her song was lascivious to a degree, and strange because, selling in the wants. It rose and fell, and sometimes had drawled in a confused, yet painful manner. In the smoking-room Mrs. Dallas had risen to her feet and to their deep contrasts note, and was stood rocking herself to and fro with an expression of alarm on her face. Isabella was terrified to her feet. She shrieked and ran out of the room. Then Dido, still singing, appeared at the window, and looked at Mrs Dallas with an expression of triumph.

"Why do you sing the death song?" asked Mrs Dallas, covering her face.

"Because the master has doomed that pale-faced" said Dido, and continued her song.

In the meantime, Maurice walked slowly homeward, puzzling out his own mind, as to what could be the meaning of these strange proceedings. He could understand why Mrs. Dallas wanted Aylmer for her daughter, and could guess at the reasons for the mysterious word "Voodoo," pronounced so solemnly by Dido. However, he was sufficiently sure that the mysterious interfering obeyed in the Dallas household also had a hand in the matter, and over the well-off her mistress, she could not act as she pleased.

Maurice, simple and upright in conduct and character, was no match for the unscrupulous machinations of Dido. She hated Dallas, and was determined that he should not marry her mistress. But whether she liked like Mrs. Dallas, a preference for David over Jed, Maurice could not determine. The more he thought over affairs, the more bewildered and complicated did they become; so Aylmer gave up the task in despair. Then it occurred to him that Mrs. Dallas had referred him to Major Jed; so to his guardian Maurice bent his steps, and arrived at the big house.

"Major gone, sah," explained Jaggard, to whom Maurice applied for information. "He set a message from Dr Etwald, and went to see him. He back in Saturday night."

"Where is Mr. Arthur?"

"Gone to Hendon Hall, sir."

"Hm, hm!" thought Maurice, as he astonished tone. "You will hear of drama to-day! I wonder, and see Mrs Dallas cajole her victim. 'Do shall marry her!'

"I refuse to marry Mr Stacey," said Isabella, vehemently. "I hate him."

"That is no matter!" replied her mother coldly. "You must marry him!"

"Impossible!" repeated Maurice, with great indignation.

"Yes, Mr. Aylmer! Must! Must! Must! If you want an explanation of that you can ask Major Jed."

"Where is Mr. Arthur?"

"Gone to Hendon Hall, sir."

"Hm, hm!" thought Maurice, as he turned away. "Mr David had gone to see Meg. Now if he is in love with Isabella, Mrs. Dallas favors his suit. I wonder why he acts in this way."

The question he could not answer, so determining if time bring the answer, he re-lit the smoking-room with a noisy. When Jim came home he returned his greetings in question both, and, is possessed to question both of these sides with decision. "Jaggard, did you see Major Jed?"

"Hang it!" soliloquized Maurice over his book. "Since yesterday everything seems to have gone wrong. That my great friend Etwald saw at the bottom of affairs. But I can't see their motive for acting as they do."

Then he laid aside his book to think and stared idly at the opposite wall. It occurred to he that upon which the barbaric weapons hung, and which were arranged, and conspicuous among them the curious bundle of the devil-stick. Recalling the mention of voodoo, and Etwald's reference to African witchcraft, Maurice connected in his mind the devil-stick with these barbarisms, and on the impulse of the moment, he reached down the bundle to weigh it. Handling it carefully—for he dreaded the sting of a scorpion, although it was not to defied us—he wondered if Dido could make use of it were it in again at half-past eight; it is gone in those two hours Dido has had time to cross the lawn yonder and steal it."

"But why do you suspect Dido? She was never in this room."

"No, but Dr. Etwald was."

"Dr. Etwald! Do you think he has anything to do with it?" queried Jim, peripheral, and a little startled.

"I am certain of it," replied Maurice. "He employed Dido to steal it from you, as you refused to sell it. I know, sure, and I'll give you my reasons for this belief," and then Maurice told another all that had taken place with "The Wigwam" during the afternoon.

Major Jed listened quietly, and waited until Maurice ended his story before he spoke. The information about Mrs Dallas did her reference to him not, and not surprise him as much as Aylmer expected it would do. In fact, he only made one brief remark upon this point.

"I am sorry Mrs. Dallas said that," he remarked, when Maurice paused in his narrative.

"But what does she mean by the Uncle Jed? Didn't you wish me to marry Isabella?"

"I am neither for nor against," replied Jed, calmatically. "As I said before bet the girl marry whom she pleases."

"She loves me best!"

Major Jed wriggled uneasily in his seat. He disliked telling what appeared to him to be a silly story, but he work story lose strongly upon the general position of things, and as Maurice was impatiently waiting to be enlightened, Jed was forced to put his scruples on one side and speak out.

"If what I relate appears impossible, don't blame me," he said abruptly, "and I feel certain that you will laugh when I tell you about Voodoo."

"That word again!" cried Maurice, in a puzzled voice. "Dido used it when she was struck, she repeated it to me before I left. 'Voodoo! Voodoo!' What does it mean, Uncle Jed?"

"African witchcraft! Obi! Fetishworship! The adoration of the bad spirit who catches mortals by the hair. Any one of these things explains the meaning of the term."

"Hm!" said Maurice. "It is a devil-worship pure and simple."

"Yes, and Mrs. Dallas knows more about it than be good for her. My boy," Jim laid his hand upon the arm of the young man, "when you reach my age you will find that there is no limit to the cruelty and folly of human beings. When I was stationed in the Barbados many years ago I met Mrs Dallas."

"Is she also is an old friend of yours?"

"Yes. I knew her in the West Indies shortly before Isabella was born. I was through knowing me," explains of the Major, "that she came to this neighborhood and rented The Wigwam.

"You see, Maurice, I was one of the few people she knew here, and she counted upon me for company's sake, and because she was afraid of her power."

"I don't quite understand."

"You will. I never worked for a man without knowing what I was about."

TRIP ON THE GREAT EASTERN.

Famous Steamship a Comfortable Boat So Long as She Kept Going.

"You can say what you please about the old Great Eastern," said an American who had crossed the ocean twice a year every year for almost half a century, "but she was a grand idea. The trouble was that the idea was almost fifty years ahead of its time. It has taken the world all that time to grow up to a great Eastern, as exemplified by the Lusitania and the Mauretania.

"I made my first voyage to Europe in the Great Eastern. That was in 1862. It was the first time she crossed sailed into Liverpool. She had accommodations for 10,000 passengers, but there were only 100 in her on that trip.

"You know she had both a propeller and paddle-wheels. As long as she kept on it was all right, for she moved along steadily and majestically, but one day we were hailed by a small French steamer that had said to send to Europe and we stopped short in midocean while a boat put out from the other vessel.

"Well, how it happened I don't know, but the huge mountain of a vessel seemed to lose her balance. Anyhow, about noon there in a dreadful fashion. Passengers and stewards were hurled about in every direction, and for crockery, I don't believe a whole plate or cup and saucer was saved from the wreckage.

"On the vessel was every sort of general cargo including live stock, and as for provisions, why, we had better food and fresher meat on board for a longer today. We had also lately fresh meat, fresh milk and freshly aitled chickens.

"Even in speed the Great Eastern was in advance of her time, for it took us only eight days to get to Liverpool."—New York Sun.

PLUCKING LIVE GEESE

An Operation Necessary to Procure Good Feathers.

LOCKING THE BIRDS' WINGS.

This Trick Performed and Their Legs Bandaged Together, the Helpless Geese Are Ready, if Not Willing, Victims For the Expert Pickers.

"Yes," said a manufacturer and dealer in bed furnishings, "it is necessary that goose feathers should be taken from the live goose if we are to supply the health and comfort of people who think they must have feather beds and pillows. Dead goose feathers are not worth better than books to be on and have not the great virtue of healthwholesomeness.

"They say it doesn't hurt a goose to pluck it, but it seems to me that one night as well say that it wouldn't hurt a man to have his whiskers yanked out by the handful. The reason they give for latching a goose down's neck when its feathers are being plucked out of it is that it never squawks or squeaks or makes a fuss while the plucking is going on.

"Now, I believe it hurts a goose like the mischief to have its feathers pulled out, coming as they do from the tender, sensitive body, and the reason the fowl doesn't utter any protest prompted by pain is, according to the way I have used goose up, because it is not a sitting fowl. A goose will squawk and chatter and cackle as if it were suffering more agony than a horse with the colic just at the noisy sight of you, but if you come up to it and pick it with stones it seems to forget that it has a voice and will stand the punishment you give it without a further word.

"The Pennsylvania Dutch farmers pluck goose today just the same as their forbears did time out of mind, and I don't know as there is any other way. It certainly couldn't be made any pleasanter for the goose unless the plucker held chloroform or something like that to its nose while the plucking was going on. The goose in its barefs of their feathers are first got together in an inclosure used for the purpose. The prosperity of goose only be strikingly made known to you when they are being rounded up in such an inclosure if there should happen to be a bystander in one end of it, the door being at the other. That door may be six feet high and three broad, but goose after goose will lie more it and try its best to get through the knothole, indeed, though, to try the door, every goose will lay its head down as it passes through for fear of knocking it against the top of the door jamb, six feet above.

"There is a man or a boy in every neighborhood where geese are plucked who is an expert in getting the goose ready for the process. Not every one can do that. The wings of the goose have to be locked together in a peculiar arrangement of the two near the shoulder, and, while they are not tied or fastened in any other way, the lock is such that no goose can unlock it. The goose's feet are tied together with a bread band of soft cotton. Then it is ready for the plucker.

"The plucker, who are almost always women, go among the geese with their hoods and faces entirely covered with hoods fastened around the neck with a skirt string. There are holes in the hoods for the eyes and also at the nose to supply fresh air for breathing. From the neck down the pickers are covered with a glazed muslin garment to which no feather or down will cling. The pickers will sit on low stools around a large and perfectly dry tub. Each takes in her lap a goose made helpless by its interlocked wings and bound legs and with rapid plying of her fingers separates the feathers from it. This is done with such skill, though, that the poorest entirely means the goose's skin or causes blood to follow the plucking out of a feather. The air is constantly filled with the light feathers during the plucking, but they settle into the tub at last.

"But there isn't as much call for the goose to undergo the raping of its feathers as there used to be. Not one pound of goose feathers is used today where there were fifty pounds twenty-five years ago. Old as it may seem, asthma and hay fever long ago began to save a good deal to do with geese as far the demand for feather beds and pillows. It was discovered that asthma and hay fever had an affinity for such couches and bend rests; that nothing would start an asthmatic off for a cheerful night's wheezing so quickly as a feather bed. This discovery spread, and the goose owes a great deal of its later years comfort to the asthma"—Detroit Free Press.

THE HORSE WON.

A Race With a Locomotive When Railroads Were New.

In 1832 the first charter was obtained for a railroad in the United States. It was for a line from Philadelphia to a point on the Susquehanna river, but was never built. On the announcement of the project some one asked one of the Baltimore newspapers, "What is a railroad, anyhow?" The editor was forced to reply that he did not know, but that "perhaps some other correspondent can tell."

Seven years later on the little wooden track along the Lackawanna creek the first locomotive had its trial. The experiment was far from successful, and for a number of years afterward the trains on most of the railroads continued to be drawn by horses. The first locomotive on the Baltimore and Ohio had sails attached. So did the cars. These sails were hoisted when the wind was in the right direction to assist the locomotive.

The rivalry between the railroads using locomotives and those using horses was very bitter. In August, 1830, a certain trial of speed was held between a horse and one of the pioneer locomotives which did not result in favor of the locomotive. The race was on the Baltimore and Ohio, the locomotive being one built by Peter Cooper, who also acted as engine driver.

The horse, a gaunt gray, was to the habit of pulling a car on a track paralled to that used by the locomotive. At first the speed and the letter of the race, but when he was a quarter of a mile ahead Mr. Cooper stopped in getting up enough steam to pass the horse amid terrific applause.

At that moment a band slipped from a pulley, and "though Mr. Cooper labored his hands trying to replace it the engine stopped, the horse passed it and came in the winner."

As there were no brakes on the early trains, they used to shoe and to start with jolts which threw the passengers across the car. The coupling was with chains, having two or three feet of slack, which the engine at starting took up with a series of fierce jerks. The shock so stopping was even worse and "never failed to send the passengers flying."

There were no whistles in the old days. Signals were given by pinching up the valve on the dome by hand and letting the steam escape with a loud hissing noise. On the New Castle and Frenchtown railroad when the signal was heard the slaves around the stables would rush to the arriving train, seize hold of it and pull back with all their might while another ran with a piece of wood through a wheel.

There were so many collisions and explosions that some southern railroads introduced what they called a barrier car between the locomotive and the passenger coaches of the train. This barrier car consisted of a platform on wheels upon which were piled six bales of cotton, and it was claimed it would safeguard the passengers in two ways—it would protect them from the blowing up of the locomotive and would form a soft cushion upon which the passengers could land in the event of a collision. There is no record of how this experiment worked out.—American Cultivator.

SERMON FROM SHAKESPEARE

(Copyright 1909 by Underwood & Underwood, Co. Ltd.)

What a man,
If his chief good and market of his time
Be but to sleep and feed? A beast, no more.

Hamlet—Act IV, Sc. 4.

Shakespeare took pride in his manhood. His reasoning faculties, his self-consciousness, his knowledge of good and evil, were to him godlike attributes. Man in his physical nature is the "paragon of animals." The highest tribute Shakespeare pays any of his creations is that bestowed on the dead Brutus by his enemy Marc Antony:

"His elements
So mixed in him that nature might stand up
And say to all the world, This was a man!"

In "Hamlet" he gives an epigrammatical utterance on man that has become part of every reader's mental equipment, and has done much to give dignity to human character. No man can read the following words without having noble aspirations: "What a piece of work is a man! How noble in reason! how infinite in faculties! in form and moving how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals!"

Wherein is it that man holds such an important position in the created world? It is in his self-consciousness. In his power of "looking before and after." He has the experience of the ages to hold on; from the past and the present to cast forward the future, and can be a force in building up that future. It seemed to Shakespeare a horrible thing that man, possessed of godlike reason, should allow his gifts to fast upon scabs in filth unused. There is sublime scorn in his designation of the dross in the human live as "a beast, no more." Work, work toward some definite end, work for the betterment of human society, is what raises man above the beast of the field. "No man stands alone. When we have, what we are, we owe largely to society. If the reasoning faculty is finely developed it is because Job and Isaiah, Plato and Aristotle, Shakespeare and Milton, Emerson and Longfellow, have lived before us and left on the heritage of their intellectual productions. If we have comfortable houses and sanitary cities it is because architects and physicians have been active in the past in their endeavors to ameliorate conditions. Is man going to accept this generous heritage, enjoy it, and leave the world no better for having sojourned in it? Will he content to eat and sleep, so do the cows knowledge in the juicy meadow grass?

No man can afford to forget that he is a society whose stability depends on the active co-operation of the men here. If he has wealth it is not his own. It belongs to humanity. He has it merely in trust. He is guilty of crime if he squanders it solely to satisfy his own desires. He should be actively at work doing his duty in the present and building for the future. It is the men who are striking railways across the continents, erecting factories, opening up wheatfields, who are doing the work their Creator intended them to do. It is the pioneer who, dinner pail in hand, goes forth with willing spirit to lay ties and rails, to turn the wheels of industry, to plough and to reap, who is entitled to be called, "The beauty of the world."

The highest attribute of the Divine is His creative power. Labor raises man to the Divine. In the thing a man moulds and fashions he has a creator's delight, but his highest pleasure is in the thought of the benefit his fellows will derive from the work of his brain and hands. When all men realize and their social position, their intellectual endowments, their wealth, belong to humanity, that they are only humanity's trustees and co-workers, the millennium will have arrived.

In this age there are signs that this point of view is gripping the race. The Carnegies, the Rockefellers, the Strathconas are giving back to man a goodly portion of the wealth that energy and accident has so lavishly bestowed on them. Their chief good is not to sleep and feed. They seek, rightly or wrongly, to make the world better. They have enriched the world with libraries, universities and hospitals. All men cannot do this, but all men can work. "It is work that gives flavor to life." It is work, work for eternal ends, which raises man above the beast. It is work which shapes character. Idleness is the mother of extravagance and vice. An idle man is a curse to himself and a burden to humanity. In the human hive there is no room for drones. Some say, "Let us eat, drink and be merry for to-morrow we die." We do not die. Our bodies pass into dust, but for deeds live on. Every man, no matter what humble position he may occupy, has it in his power to make the world better and brighter for his presence. Work, doing whatsoever the hand findeth to do, not merely for pay, but as a pleasant duty, raises man to the infinite. Idleness, sleeping and feeding, makes man "a beast, no more". Like the fruitless fig tree it only to be cut down.

—John Miller, who was seriously injured some time ago by the breaking loose of a load of logs on the bridge, is again able to be about the house, but will not be able to be out again this winter. The extended period of his illness is due to an attack of erysipelas, which, for a time, threatened to be quite serious.

Amount paid for same in the month of January, 1910, $111.62. Amount paid for same for the month of February, 1909, $78.75. Amount paid for same from Feb. 1st, 1910, to date, noon today, Antrim county papers please copy.

—There is a lot of good farming land in Michigan going to waste, according to a report which has recently been compiled by the commissioner of the general land office, and 2,097,000 acres of it is in Charlevoix county. Whether or not the immigration bureau has had knowledge of this fact is not stated, but to any one who is looking for an opportunity to establish a homestead it would seem that Michigan is the place for him to settle.

—Big bunches of "seed" literature are being received almost every week by letter carriers from Detroit. If our carrier publishers are favored as we are there must be some work being done somewhere. Judging from our experience the seed is being sown on very stony soil so far we haven't even seen a sprout of it in any of the papers.—Petoskey Evening Herald.

—H. H. Elsworth, of Traverse City, secretary of the West Michigan Development Bureau, in charge of the boat quarters office, was in the city Tuesday for the first time. Mr. Elsworth is a newspaper man of experience, and knows how to make the most of newspaper publicity. He worked in the interest last year under the leadership of Mr. Rowe, and is familiar with the work.

Old Charlevoix Houses.

While many of the homes of forty years ago are disappearing, either by reconstruction or destruction, several remain as landmarks and reminders of the early days.

Very few of the present day know, or stop to think, that the tenement house bordering in the rear of the Charlevoix State Savings Bank was the postoffice and home of the postmaster of forty odd years ago. In those days it stood in the center of a large vacant area fronting the river, just below the bridge.

Forty-two years ago Jackson and Almon Ingalls, brothers, bought three lots on State street, (now Bay avenue) dividing the property in the middle. The same year they built the homes that are now occupied by A. T. Hurnett and Chas. Hyres. The Stockman house, on the the same avenue, was built forty-one years ago last summer. The Mason residence, on the south terrace, was built the same year.

The structure formerly known as the Richards saloon building, on Bridge street, was the Lalster store forty-two years ago, and it stood on the bank of Round Lake at the foot of Clinton street.

The Dahlmer house, on Belvedere Avenue, was the Walter Clifford store, and it was built forty-one years ago.

The house that shelters "Uncle Johnny" Woods, on Antrim street, was built by him forty-two years ago next summer.

The little house that stands at the corner of Bridge and Antrim streets, opposite the Hotel Dalton, was built nearly forty-two years ago.

The wing of Major Green's pleasant home on Bridge street, housed the Major and his wife forty-one years ago this winter.

The Fox store, on Bridge street, now owned by Wilbur and occupied by Fred Myers, was built forty one years ago the coming spring, and opened up as a store in July of that year. The warehouse immediately in its rear was built the same year.

The most conspicuous of the old houses is the Morgan building, on the corner of State and Mason streets. It was built forty years ago and occupied as a store and residence by Henry Morgan for several years. It is conspicuous because it is in the middle of the street and an eye-sore to the residents of both streets.

A large majority of the old homes have been kept in good conditions by rebuilding and adding exterior adornments. To the old-timer these pioneer homes speak eloquently of the early days.

A most notable building in the list of relics is the Pepinsen house, on Antrim street. Forty two years ago it was the school house, and it stood on the corner just west of its present location. It was rebuilt into a pleasant home, but its walls enclose the bones of the old school house.

The Boyne City Boiled Barrel company is a new incorporation with capital increased from $12,000 to $30,000.

Charlevoix Gets $20,000 in River and Harbor Bill.

It was reported some time ago that the engineers were to leave Charlevoix harbor out in the cold in their estimates for 1910. The report was either not true, or the engineers because conscience stricken, at the river and harbor bill has been framed and reported to the House of Representatives.

Lake Michigan harbors are in the bill as follows: Charlevoix, $20,000; South Haven, $30,000; Saugatuck, $10,000; Holland, $12,000; Grand Haven, $40,000; Muskegon, $70,000; Ludington, $40,000; Manistee, $45,000; Portage Lake, (harbor of refuge), $15,000; Frankfort, $20,000; Petoskey, $20,000.

In comparison with other ports in the list receiving like amounts, from the view point of relative tonnage in and out, the $20,000 allotment for Charlevoix is ridiculously low. The disparity is the outgrowth of the red tape policy of the engineers in basing estimates upon official custom house records, which do not tell more than oversights of the tonnage that enters and departs cargo laden.

So far as Charlevoix is concerned, Round Lake is the harbor of refuge, large tonnage in passenger steamers there is ample water in the channel, But, officially, Charlevoix harbor embraces Round Lake, into which another and a more uncertain channel leads. On the shores of Pine Lake there are two iron furnaces with auxiliary chemical plants, as well as large lumber, and other manufacturing interests. If all these interests would combine to place their shipments, in and out, before the engineers, in properly certified form, custom house records are unnecessary. The reason for this situation is that vessels loading or discharging cargo more than six miles from a custom house, on government waters, are not compelled to report to clear.

Our congressmen have always seemed to be too busy to give this matter the attention that it deserves. There is greater tonnage passes through Charlevoix harbor in one week than dock at both Frankfort and Petoskey in a month; and yet each of the latter harbors get as much as Charlevoix.

DEVELOPMENT BUREAU

New Secretary Elected—By-Laws Adopted—Traverse City Made Permanent Headquarters.

At the meeting of the Western Michigan Development Bureau board of directors held Wednesday afternoon at Traverse City, business of great importance was transacted and the meeting brought together many prominent and interesting discussions and debates.

John I. Gibson, at present secretary of the Battle Creek Board of Trade, was unanimously elected by the directors, and it was decided to engage Mr. Gibson as the paid secretary of the bureau, and as soon as he can be released from the City Clerk and take up his position in the offices of the bureau. Mr. Gibson is a very competent man and understands the business from start to finish, and he is just the man for the work in this region.

The by-laws of the Western Michigan Development bureau were submitted by the committee and discussed at length by the board of directors and finally accepted. These by-laws make Traverse City the permanent home of the bureau, as also the articles of incorporation.

CASUAL OBSERVATIONS

Or Matters of Current Interest—Gathered in the Passing Hour From What We Read and Hear.

Senator Burrows is in Michigan for a few weeks, in order to prove to the satisfaction of the people that he is not "indirm" nor in his dotage. Mr. Burrows has reached an age when he may be called venerable, but he has not passed the limit point of usefulness in public affairs. Before the senator completes his tour of the state it will be pretty well demonstrated that he is in the swim.

We don't hear a word about who wants to succeed Mr. Pearson as representative from the Charlevoix district. Representative Pearson has a clean and consistent legislative record, and it may be that he would not object to going back again. If not, who wants to go? Don't all speak at once.

We note that D. S. Payton was elected a member of the executive committee of the Western Michigan Development Bureau. This is a promotion from a county directorship, and it is richly deserved. Excepting Mr. Howe, there was not a man in the bureau who did more than oversight of the tonnage that enters and departs cargo laden.

So far as Charlevoix is concerned, Round Lake is the harbor of refuge, large tonnage in passenger steamers there is ample water in the channel. But, officially, Charlevoix harbor embraces Round Lake, into which another and a more uncertain channel leads.

Ed Hutton writes to a friend in Antrim county, in answer to an inquiry as to how local option worked in Charlevoix county. It found its way into the columns of the Elk Rapids Progress, and it cannot fail to do much good in the Antrim county local option campaign. It is a fact that Charlevoix has had the same number of business and decency of any similar period in its history. There have been a few cases of drunkenness, but all Antrim county whiskey was responsible for them.

Wanted, in Charlevoix—four more Geo. Van Petten. Van is all right, only we want more like him—men who have confidence in the future of Charlevoix; men who have a clear insight into the future and who have an abiding faith in the destiny of our city. We want men who believe in healthful, steady growth and who care not for ephemeral, speculative booms.

Political Jottings.

It's all off now. All other candidates may as well retire from the race. A Detroit cigar manufacturer has named a cigar for Chase S. Osborn. What's the use of anybody buckling against that sort of influence.

Fred C. Weimore, of Cadillac, has joined the forces of senator Julius Caesar Burrows and opened headquarters with John N. Bagley, who is handling the Burrows campaign in this county. Weimore will have active charge of the field work. In the eastern half of the state.

These are strenuous times for the aspirants for senatorial candidates, and ruinous to digestion.

Let's see! What senatorial district in Charlevoix county is now? Strange that it should have slipped our memory.

The Townsend managers are working quietly and if they are securing as many assistants to do the field work as Mr. Burrows, they are not betraying that fact.

Its getting almost time for some other candidate to announce himself for governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state and some of the present state officers to announce themselves for re-election.

Chase S. Osborn and Patrick H. Kelley have patched up their differences, at least for the time being. Both occupied the same room at the same hotel in Flint last week and both declared that all hard feeling between them was over.

Colon C. Lillie announces that he is not giving up with any of the gubernatorial candidates and purposes to run his campaign for the lieutenant governorship alone. He does say, however, that he will work hardest among the farmers, where he is better known than in the cities.

CHAPTER VII.—(Continued.)

"I shall explain, and it is lucky for you that Mrs. Dallas guessed your name, else to ask me for an explanation, otherwise I should have been forced, from a sense of honor, to hold my tongue. Mrs. Dallas fears that if Isabella marries anyone but David, her death will take place.

"Where death? Isabella's or Mrs. Dallas'."

"The latter. You must know, Maurice," continued the Major, "that Mrs. Dallas, though well born and well nourished, is an extremely ignorant woman. She was brought up mainly by Dickes grandmother, who was the most superstitious old hag in Barbadoes. This old hag instilled into the mind of Mrs. Dallas all kinds of superstitious, in which she really believes. When the grandmother died, Mrs. Dallas came to Isabella, and private witch of the Dallas family she was, and she proved wonderfully clever—and, she has continued ever since to exercise a very terrorizing both Mrs. Dallas and Isabella."

"Yes; I can see that Uncle Jem, and it is for that reason I want to marry Isabella, and make a lady out of her before I intend to threaten further by that old fury."

"Well, the old fury sees what you want, my dear, and, as she is a clever, cultured lady, she would grey hair out of the sorrow she would give her daughter's heart. The negress is very fond of Isabella, and I have heard that she has promised to be—I quoted her, yet Mr. Ayl, who is a gentleman, will not believe it—"dead and buried" if Isabella marries you. Mrs. Dallas will die."

"And you, Uncle, do you believe that rot-bun?" asked Maurice, incredulous.

"Implicitly! I tell you she is ignorant and superstitious. Come what may, she is convinced that your marriage with Isabella means her own death; so, just such a determined Maurice, that she will never, never accept you as her son-in-law."

"I understand," said Maurice, with a sigh. "It seems hard to be crossed little decision on a diseased and feeble mind. I am understand Dido stop-ping my marriage, as she wants to marry her mistress herself, but Isabella! I can understand Mrs. Dallas, weak and silly, being dominated by the negro Jezebel; but I can't understand why Isabella should be a sister-in-law. If he marries Isabella, he will go more out pop with Dido than Isabella loves Dido."

"Of course, you! I don't explain the reason," replied Jem, shaking his head. "Put you know as well as I know, Maurice, and you can see this it is hope-less for you to attempt to marry the girl."

"I'm not my sure of that," retorted Maurice. "I love Isabella, and come what may, I intend to make her my wife."

"But what about me?" said a voice outside the open window; "what about me?" And a moment later David, in dusty riding-dress, stepped into the room. He looked tired and angry; and his strongly marked face, lines and traces of sadness, looked haggard. Disturbed by the unexpected appearance of David, and seeing from his excited manner that he had been upon making himself disagreeable, Jem, lazily interposed to prevent a quarrel between the two young men.

"What, David? look again!" he said, ignoring the question asked by Marks. "Do you did not stay to dinner?"

"No," replied David, sharply. "I didn't." He threw himself into a chair and stretched his a wandering, tired Mars. Bennie didn't ask me, and if she had I couldn't have stayed in his dress. Besides, I saw not the man who I was delighted to honor. Now, Mr. Maurice had been there, Mog—"

"Don't couple my name with Mog's," interrupted Maurice, sharply. "You know quite well—"

"Is no use your consuming that infernal tri- Maurice. Mog is the greatest Mog walker—"

"I have, David, I have you say such a thing." Mog knew that I was in love with Isabella."

"Why? said David, with a sneer. "I overheard you argued to marry her. But you'll never do that while I am alive, and Mrs. Dallas alive. Mrs. Dallas thinks that I loved Isabella, and she sent that rotting would give her greater pleasure than to see a married."

"You shan't marry her!" cried Maurice, angrily rising.

"I shall!" said David, and rose also. "Boys! Boys!" said Jem, annoyed at this quarrel, "do not be so foolish. If you are both in love with the same woman, let the woman decide."

"She has decided!" said Aylmer, sharply. "She loves me."

"I don't care two straws about that," said David, coolly. "I have an opinion to her yet; but all the same I intend her to become my wife. I give you fair warning, Maurice, that you are not to pass upon my preserves. "Your preserves. Confound your insolence!"

"Here my word, David," said Jem, seeing that Maurice could hardly speak for rage, "I do not see why you girl love Maurice and not you; and it would be much more favorable for you not to press your suit."

"I don't see this plan for honor, Major! I love Isabella, and I intend to marry her. But because I love Maurice she never shall; I'd rather see her married to Satan."

"The third bridegroom who is in the field," mocked Maurice, "is not so good a chance as you. Dido supports his pretensions; Mrs. Dallas is your champion. As for me, I have the love of Isabella, so I'm not afraid of nothing."

"Are you sure?" said Sidney, with a peculiar smile. "Remember what Jem said about your rival being a nobody."

"I don't believe in that rubbish, Jem, and I should be very sorry to think you did."

"As to that, I don't care about discussing the point," was the reply. "Our own beliefs are a matter of conscience. But I may say that Sidney is nearer my mark than you and to me."

"I demand," said Maurice, coolly. "The more so, as I believe he has stolen the devil-stick."

"What!" Jem made a step forward and stared at the wall. His face was quite pale, and his hands trembled in spite of his efforts to control himself. "The devil-stick gone!" he said, turning on his heel. "Hush you and I must be careful, Maurice."

CHAPTER VIII.

So for the remainder of the day, all continued quiet. Of this story, Affection witheredall, an serious strangest, and hatterie woman seem to be not in those when sit in the sober Tennessee, of a greatest town, Mrs. Dallas is not dependent upon lumbesque or an superstitious for its amusement. It is to be found every where, and very often in the most unlikely places. Her, for instance, for some little of late, ex-Major Jem in the kinds of amusement, certain passions had been aroused, and not the drama had been set in motion in earnest likely that it would play it self out in a tragical conclusion.

For a whole week after the event already recorded, matters were kept tilently to alter the situation. Maurice and David Dallas called quite often, very wakeful of one another, neither mentioned the name of Isabella, nor of the one or the other—so Jem did. Mrs. Dallas took care of that. Acting on doubt, under the advice of Dido, she kept Isabella within doors and refused to allow her to communicate with Maurice. But, on the other hand, she did not force her to see David, and Isabella was thankful for the concession.

But there was one visitor to The Wand of Sleep whom Isabella would gladly have avoided—no less an individual than Dr. Hewlett. After the violence of some weeks before, he was overtaxed her strength that she became ill, and the doctor was sent for. His more presence aquested to south Mrs. Dallas, and he came frequently. When she could, Isabella shunned herself; but this she was not able to do on all occasions, and so she had to endure his sophomoric speeches and the mimmerly quatter of his gaze. This last, especially, was a trial to one of her sensitive organization, and one day she felt so uncomfortable that she remonstrated with Hewlett.

"You make me nervous, doctor," she said, impatiently. "Your gaze is disagreeable to me."

"My dear young lady," replied the man, blandly, "I must look at you when I address you."

"Then don't address me!"

"Invalids do not be rude!" cried Mrs. Dallas, who had overheard this passage of arms; whereupon the girl with a defiant glance at her tormentor, left the room.

"I'm sure I don't know what I'll do with Isabella," said Mrs. Dallas, "she is getting so disobedient."

"Nervous, madam, nervous yet."

Mrs. Dallas looked uneasily at her medical attendant.

"Ah," she said, quickly, "I may persuade her into doing what I want."

"Which is in some way for her benefit," said Hewlett, coolly. "In that case and longer than she is ill, I think will continue obstinate, as I wish to have my way."

"I know—I know. But I don't want to be worried yet, doctor. Mr. Sarby is the man for my daughter. He is a good-looking and clever man."

"Not over!" mildred Hewlett.

"Well, yes," assented Mrs. Dallas, more in deference to the man's tone than to a obstacle, as Isabella has money. The young people are to be three thousand a year."

Dr. Hewlett was familiar with this sum running in his head, and more than over he resolved to marry Isabella, he was in love with her, and would have given her without a penny; but, the same, if she was an heiress in a small way, was all the better. The doctor was clever but poor, and with an income that was sufficient to be unenjoyable and do great things. There were many women in Hewlett's town and certain of those he determined to propose to, when he had time to secure hold; is for his wife.

Some time previously Major Jem had asked Hewlett about the devil-stick, but only in a casual way, for he did not know nothing of the missing article.

"I have not set eyes on it since that night you showed it to me," declared Hewlett, coolly. "I refused to sell it to me, so of course I gave up all idea of possessing it. All the same, I lighted by, politely, 'I am sorry that it is lost.'

"Lost! Stolen, you mean," growled Jem, testy. "That reminds—

"Idiot! Well, I admit that such a curious treasure would tempt her, the more particularly as she knows about such wizard instruments. Ask her if she took it."

"I have! I asked her, and I have asked Mrs. Dallas also," replied Jem; "but it seems that Dido wasn't out of the house that night. She was ill—and, odd enough, I hear, Hewlett, that it was you who made her ill."

"Hostile!" said Hewlett, quite self-possessed. "I suppose I have to bear you so. I thought as much," he continued, as Jem, with a face as red as cultured Dido's agitation when I arrived to see Mrs. Dallas and her daughter's hand. This negress is hysterical, and on that day she happened to be so. I quieted her, yet Mr. Ayl, who was present, accused me of having caused the illness."

"I don't know anything about it, Hewlett; but truth to tell, Maurice does not like you."

"Because I prophesied ill concerning him?"

"No, that was rubbish!" Jem, contemptuously. "You don't mean it."

"Utterly! Well and sorry."

After which Jehoiah bowed his visitor politely to the door of the drawing-old house, which he answered in Dandymanner, and Jem returned home, quite baffled as to what could have become of the devil-stick. Maurice and Isabella left the house. Mrs. Dallas, who had overheard this passage of arms, thereupon fell into a defiant glance at her tormentor, and left the room.

"I'm sure I don't know what I'll do with Isabella," said Mrs. Dallas, "she is getting so disobedient."

"Nervous, madam, nervous yet."

FROM SHAKESPEARE

(Prior to the Hidden Inspiration of 1583)

Will you hear a good sermon,
Will you hear a good sermon,
Will you hear a good sermon,
Up and down the town?

The methods of men change but little. It has been said that experiments teach us. This may be true for the individual but for society the mass of humanity, the rule seem periods of hopeless ages are set in mud. The half mind in Cassandra time and in Abraham Lincoln time is quite as the mind guiding our ship of state.

Charles and his brother conspirators were determined to destroy Cassandra, but they feared the people. The star, Hannah, for Michelson, was the darling of the conspirators. Their problem he solved, unknowable. Twice born in Indian, Hannah and Charles could give such a sermon as would make our congressional dreamers of the silly politicians, of Boston Chaos resurrected.

"O he sits high in all the people's hearts;
And that which would appear offence in us,
His countenance, like richest alchemy,
Will change to virtue."

Hence, when novel opinions clash, when the prejudiced and the learned and the citizen realizes that if Boston would but join hands with Chaos, become a director of their stock company for need for number and spells, they might succeed.

Then will one other man in Boston who might incline to be the hero of dreamers. Chaos. His eloquent tongue had worn blue a station of adulators. His vision had never been refined when Boston was in danger. According to Shoshiko,

"His silver hairs
Will purchase us a good opinion,
And buy men's voices to commend our deeds:
It may happen
The worst is the best."

The method of Boston men's approval has long stood as still in common practice. In a doubtful industry — operation, an effort is invariably made to get some venerable citizen on the board of directors — in the president's chair, if possible. Men still occupy gray hairs. They mark experience, and experience is the father of wisdom. They mark the approach of death, and it is easy to believe that a man on the verge of the grave could be a "good guy." So the promoters of industrial corporations, mining companies, oil companies, stock companies, selling companies, drop out a venerable old fellow to one of their best seats.

Now, in every community, there is a little man who has the starch of honor on them, who could not be bought by a million, who is a pebble in the proud promoter needs them, and he is one of their best seats.

THE ENGLISH ELECTIONS.

Liberals Will Continue to Direct Policy of British Empire.

The Liberals will continue to direct the policy of the British empire. The lead in cut down some in the present appeal to the voters. The last time the Liberals had 354 over the Unionists, counting in Irish Nationalists and 82 Laborites. Now this supremacy has been reduced to 124, including 82 Irish Nationalists and 26 Laborites.

The result is disappointing to the party of progress. It was expected that the Liberals would elect at least 50 members more than they have and that they would carry all the measures they advocated through Parliament without the aid of any other party. As it is now the vote is so close between them and the Unionists that they must depend upon the Irish Nationalists or the Laborites to get certain of their bills through. The rightful abridgment of the power of the House of Lords can only be done by an alliance with the two lesser parties. That will come, as the House Rulers and the Laborites are in full accord with the proposal. The policy of protection gets a setback because the textile centers voted over whelmingly against it.

The granting of home rule is quite unlikely, much so that it was hoped that this might come to pass. Premier Asquith presented Ireland in his speech. He been valorously contending for, but even he will hardly be able to gain for the landless strength among his party is sufficient, by joining hands with the Nationalists, to compass the consummation. The failure to achieve this will offer the premier's pledge is not regrettable.

The system of labor exchanges will be established now that the Liberals have been continued in office. There will be no time lost in formulating the well long labor and capital into closer touch by providing work for the idle in a time of depression in which the employer is as anxious for help as the leaner seeker for work in after employment.

35 DIE IN NEW HORROR.

Drakesboro, Ky., Has Mine Catastrophe—19 Bodies Taken Out.

Nineteen corpses removed from the Brewster mine at Drakesboro, Ky., ten bodies in sight in the workings and six others known to be dead was the count at midnight in the death roll resulting from the explosion of gases in the mine at noon the day before. Nineteen more were managed by the explosion, and many of these will probably die.

Rescuers worked desperately to save the miners who might yet be alive and to recover the bodies of those killed. Of the six men who were taken out, five were badly injured and five practically unhurt. There is fire in the mine and both the fan and air shafts remain intact.

Because of the accumulation of gases in the entry where the explosion occurred, it is two hours before the injured and 700 feet back from the main shaft, it was impossible to begin rescue work until six hours after the disaster. There were 100 men in the mine, many of whom sought their way to safety.

UNIONS HARD HIT BY COURT.

Verdict for $222,000 Against Hatmakers Sequel to Boycott.

The United Hatters of North America, which eight years ago declared a boycott against hats manufactured by D. E. Loewe & Co. of Danbury, Conn., following strike troubles, was hard hit the other day by action in the United States Circuit Court at Hartford.

Loewe brought suit against Martin Lawlor and about 200 other defendants, members of the union, for damages because of the boycott. Judge J. P. Platt instructed the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff, telling to the jurors the fixing of the amount of damages. The jury gave a verdict of $74,600.

As the Sherman anti-trust act, under which the action was brought, allows triple damages, Judge Platt multiplied the $74,600 by three, making the total amount for which the defendants are liable $222,000.

CHERRY WORK SLOW; MEN ARE BURROWING

Explorers in Mine Have Penetrated Only 400 Feet of Many Miles Underground.

KICKING MULES TAKE LIFE.

Bodies of Animals Which Hurt Those Trying to Escape Found—New Timbers Placed Under Roof.

After three days of incessant labor only 400 feet of the many miles of underground passages of the St. Paul mine in Cherry, Ill., were open, and it was encountered when the 157 bodies could be brought to the surface. Every effort was being made to clear a way from the main shaft to the air pit. Inspection of the cleared portion of the workings had showed that from the bottom of the main shaft 350 feet underground, westward for 250 feet, the main road is in good condition. Some of the heavy timbers near the shaft are charred, but they are solid and intact. The main passage to the east is walled up behind this wall is a smoldering fire. Back of the fire lie about the dead.

About 250 feet west of the shaft the bottom level ends in a blind alley, in which lie the bodies of two mules, covered with disinfectants. Those mules kicked violently at several miners as they ran for their lives through the smoky passageways after the fire started. One miner was kicked into unconsciousness and could not escape, while his companion was injured so severely that he is still under the care of a surgeon.

Near the end of the main road a tortuous runway branches off to the north, leading in the air shaft. The top timbers in this passage are broken, letting shale rock through. Some of the timbered scantlings appear half-rotted. There was no fire in this tunnel.

As fast as men clear the runway new timbers are placed under the crumbling roof, making the ceiling so low that a man cannot stand erect. Rocks the size of a steamer trunk were piled as high as the roof. So narrow was the tunnel and so dangerous was the work that two men were two worked at a time.

BIG NEW YORK BROKERS FAIL.

Bad Market Causes Fisk & Robinson to Go Into Receivership.

Fisk & Robinson, members of the New York Stock Exchange and one of the best known bond houses in New York, with branches in Chicago, Boston and Worcester, were petitioned in to insolvency the other day by three friendly creditors. The liabilities of the firm approximate $7,000,000, with nominal assets slightly in excess of that sum.

Failure of the bank for better collateral than is held as security for some of the firm's loans, inability of the firm to market some $2,000,000 of the bonds and preferred stock of the Buffalo and Susquehanna Railway Company and general dullness of the bond market are assigned as the causes of the failure, which, according to Joseph Stanley Brown, floor manager of the firm and one of the petitioning creditors, was decided upon when it became clear to the members that to continue further would be too dangerous and unfair to the creditor.

TRUST IN BREAKFAST FOODS!

Cereal Manufacturers Plan to Form a Holding Company.

Several of the largest cereal manufacturers in the country plan to form a holding company to take over the big factories, thus forming a trust in breakfast foods. It is understood that while some details remain to be adjusted, the deal is practically closed. The following concerns will probably be in the combine, according to the report: The Northwestern Cereal Corporation; the Minneapolis Cereal and Milling Company; the Priest Wheat Food and Milling Company; the Minnesota Cereal and Milling Company; the Battle Creek, Mich., the Pettijohn Pure Food Company; and the Iowa plants of the United Cereal Company of Chicago. It was further stated that seven or eight flour mills in Minneapolis would be in the merger and that two of the large bakery concerns of that city would also be included.

EXPRESS COMPANY MERGER ON?

American Reported Purchase of Big Stock of Wells-Fargo.

It was said in authoritative circles in New York that the American Express Company had purchased the Southern Pacific Railroad Company's holdings of stock in Wells, Fargo & Co., which is taken to indicate that a merger of the two companies is under way. The Southern Pacific's decision to sell the stock is in line with the policy of the new management of the road to avoid stock market manipulation and confine itself strictly to railroad management. James C. Fargo, President of the American Express Company, and Judge Robert S. Lovett, president of the Southern Pacific, declined to talk about the reported purchase.

The claims of several other persons, including a Miss Mary Corbett, were rejected.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The Weekly Review of Chicago Trade, published by R. G. Dun & Co., says:

The course of business generally reflects steadiness in operations and a satisfactory accumulation of orders in hands in the prominent industries. Bank statements this week impart strength to the general situation by their exhibit of gains in both deposits and discounts and the evidence of ample resources to meet needs of an expanding activity. With the liquidation in securities the direction of the money market is easier and a reduced cost of borrowing will promote wider effort in manufacturing and new enterprises.

Movements of commodities again approach normal proportions and transportation lines discover unlimited gains in gross earnings, indicating that recovery from adverse conditions continues satisfactory running of the Chicago roads. The iron manufacture seems to have brought better buying in the leading retail lines here and at the same time the stock of general merchandise have undergone adequate reduction and the favorable terms offered induce increased number of visiting buyers to attend the wholesale markets. Higher prices for cotton goods occasion little objection, their severity being apparent.

Business failures were 252, against 215 in the corresponding week last year and compared with 225 last week.

STATE TAXES ARE HIGHER.

Comparison of 1909 Figures with Those of Eight Years Ago.

While state taxes have increased 54 per cent in the past eight years, city taxes have increased 76 per cent, township taxes 54 per cent and village taxes 43 per cent. These are the figures of the report of Secretary George Lord of the state tax commission in a comparative statement of the assessed valuation, taxes levied and the average rate of taxation for the year from 1901 to 1909, inclusive. In 1901 the total assessed valuation of all property was $1,336,193,918; in 1909 it was $1,617,155,697. The total taxes levied on general property in 1901 were $25,359,404.57; last year, $43,820,000, which represents the cost of government in Michigan and the total spent for public purposes, aside from the primary school fund, much of which flies like a flock of birds out of the state. The average tax rate in 1901 was $1.897; in 1909 it was $2.706.

ADMIT ASSAULT ON HART.

Disease Young Man Son Old Man's Victim Will Stand Trial.

Henry Kinkert and Chas. Eckridge, two young men of Otsego, arrested in Kalamazoo, confessed that they were guilty of robbing the home of Taylor Hart after Hart had nearly filled the aged man by striking him on the head with an ax. The day before the assault took place at Otsego the two entered the home of Hart and robbed it. That night Eckridge hid in Hart's barn, and when the old man entered it assaulted and robbed him. The men were taken back to Otsego. Hart, it is believed, cannot survive.

FARMER VICTIM OF MURDER.

Herman Schoefels Is Found with Head Almost Severed.

Herman Schoefels, 35, was cruelly murdered in his home on a farm three miles north of Ludlow. Part of his head was cut off with a cleaver. The murderer left no clue to his identity or to the motive for the crime, he left behind the cleaver with which he worked all day. The murdered man's wife and the hired man, Albert Glassburn, brothers, were arrested later in connection with the murder. In their first statements they contradicted each other in many particulars. Glassburn's clothes were stained with blood, and some clothing covered with bloodstains.

He was chief clerk and had the handling of large sums of money in transmitting collections. The boy had always been regarded as a model young man. The man who lays up treasure in heaven is a triumphant man. The man who lays up treasure on earth is a worthy man. The man who lays up treasure in the heart of Mammon. To serve is to be the slave of what we serve. We can think they over their money, but it cannot serve us. We can use money, but it be served not Mammon, but possessed and ruled over it, and was master of it. Mammon is a tyrant.

"Therefore," says Jesus (because yo cannot serve God and Mammon) and because God has provided to take care of us, "I say unto you, we to pray each day in faith, "Give us this day our daily bread"), we must not worry about our lives, what we shall eat, nor to take care of His true children. You must therefor "Take no thought for your life." The word thought is used properly rendered here. In the Greek it literally that which chiefly the mind; hence anxiety. The Revised Version renders, "Be not anxious for your life." Another reason that He gives why we should not worry is because it does no good.

"Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature?" Worry will not enable a short man to grow one inch taller. If worry will not add to the body, it certainly will not feed or clothe the soul.

"Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: and yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was arrayed in glory like that which one of these." Jesus said that the lily perish. Put the most delicate fabric that man ever made under the microscope, and it will appear coarse and rough. But not so the flowers. If God is so minutely careful in making the even the flowers, he will not forget to look after His children.

BENEFACTOR, THIEF—SAME MAN

Recent Arrest for Horse Stealing Reveals Dual Personality.

A puzzling instance of dual personality has developed in Grand Rapids in the case of a man who says he is Gabriel Strang, or "King" Strang, the onetime Mormon ruler of the Beaver Islands in Upper Lake Michigan. The police know the man under the alias of George Sage, who, they say, confessed horse stealing after being wounded in a fight with officers near White Pigeon, Jan. 1. When sentence has been passed, the authorities declare, a horse thief and a benefactor will pay the penalties of the former's misdeeds. Gabriel Strang, it appears, lived in Ligonier, Ind., and was known to be honest. His friends say it was George Sage who stole horses. Had both men lived in the same body, it has become known that Strang is the Charles Harris who some years ago presented the Grand Rapids Public Library with a number of rare and valuable books once the property of "King" Strang.

GIRL HAS HAD THREE HUSBANDS

Leaving Girl, by Next Friend, Secures Second Divorce.

Although so young, Ione Jay, she is classed legally as an "infant" and complied to act through a friend. Levy Hamilton, to start divorce proceedings against Thomas Fox, Vera Fox has filed in the circuit court a second decree of divorce, besides burying one husband. She is but 17 years of age, yet has been married three times. The bearing of the case, which was tried in Detroit in November, but Judge Collingwood was loth to grant the decree, as he decided, the girl was too young. It is thought Mrs. Fox had had enough trials and sought to be free, so she could roam about marrying different men until she had more mature and woman-ly judgment. The appearance of Judge Arthur Joseph Judge Collingwood, however, and Vera is once more free.

EXTEND GRAND TRUNK SPUR.

Coal Fields of Hazleton Township will Be Reached.

The Grand Trunk railroad spur line now running between Corunna and Shelby is to be extended 17 miles to open the coal fields in Hazelton township. The spur was built, it was learned a large tract of hard in these coal fields and secured the right of way for the railroad extension. Th. M. Clemens and Owosso sugar companies and the Corunna business interests are interested in this extension, which will open up a rich agricultural country now without railroad facilities. The proposed extension will run to within three miles of the Hazelton mills, the village expects to be able to induce the railroad company to run the line three miles further so as to give the village railroad communication with the outside world.

UNION SUITS ARE FIRE ESCAPE.

Traveling Man and His Wife Tie Garments Together and Slide.

Three women selle bought at a bargain sale by George Sauve, traveling salesman from Detroit, saved himself and his wife from death when a tolling house at 24 Bagley avenue, Detroit, where they occupied rooms, caught fire. The place was wrapped in flames when Sauve, his wife, rushed to a rear room, discovered the fire. Escape by way of the stairs was cut off by the blaze. Sauve knotted the two suits together, tied one end to the bedpost, threw the other out of the window and thus he and his wife scrambled to the ground.

Sunday School LESSON

Subject for February 13, 1910.

Worldliness and trust. Matt. 6:19-34. Golden text: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." Matt. 6:33.

We need to remember right here that our lesson is the continuation of the Sermon on the Mount, which we have been studying for the past three weeks. Jesus being told us how to avoid the errors in prayer, practised by the Pharisees, and the heathen, now strikes at covetousness or love of money, one of the great characteristics of the carnal mind. The Pharisees were especially guilty of this. Many who think themselves entirely sanctified (?) down before one evil: it eats the soul like the moth and rust eat our goods, of which he speaks in verse 19. It is the special vice of the aged, who have had it grow upon them by the production of a lifetime. It is made so as old man, after the fires of youth have died out, slowly held in the clutches of idle sin, whose fires have burned down. Jesus gives two reasons why we should not be covetous and greedy to lay up treasures on earth. 1. Because moth and rust corrupt. Garments were used for money in the days of Christ and moths fed on clothing. Rust eats money and mice and microbes will devour grain. The idea intended is that the things are uncertain, and if our hearts are set upon them we are sure to be disappointed. If your treasure is on earth your heart's desire will not be in heaven. You will be worldly minded and not heavenly minded. You will find that this world is not the place for treasure. In the Greek "treasure" is literally "that which is hoarded." Jesus said, "Lay up treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt." Garments were used for money in the days of Christ and moths fed on clothing. Rust eats money and mice and microbes will devour grain. The idea intended is that the things are uncertain, and if our hearts are set upon them we are sure to be disappointed. If your treasure is on earth your heart's desire will not be in heaven. You will be worldly minded and not heavenly minded. You will find that this world is not the place for treasure. In the Greek "treasure" is literally "that which is hoarded." Jesus said, "Lay up treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt." 2. Because they are stolen. "Neither do thieves break through and steal

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR

Intermediate Valley Fruit Growers' Association.

East Jordan, Mich., Feb. 11, 1910.

Editor of Sentinel:

The following is a condensed report of the meeting of the Intermediate Valley Fruit Growers' Association held in Bellaire, Feb. 14, 1910.

Acting under the instructions of the members present at the last meeting of the Charlevoix county Fruit Growers' Association your secretary attended the meeting of the Antrim county Association at Bellaire and certainly enjoyed a very profitable meeting.

Secretary Bassett, of the State Horticultural Society was present and addressed an audience of about 150 farmers and farmers' wives. Mr. Bassett is a very entertaining speaker and is certainly well versed in the fruit business and knows how to impart information.

Mr. Bassett's subject was, "Getting back to Eden, or the Improvement of the Old Orchard." He made it very plain that we were really not so far removed from the ideal condition of the Garden of Eden as we really suppose or like. Says that he thinks perhaps that it was a Ben Davis apple that Adam received and that perhaps the serpent was none other than the worst of a codling moth and that as the progenitors of God's laws at that time would have averted disaster so the proper attention to nature's laws at the present time will avert trouble for the fruit grower. Carelessness will not do. Business principles are necessary in this as in other lines of business.

The orchard business is fast taking from pioneering to agriculture and what has been one of the greatest gambling propositions of the country has become one of the greatest agricultural industries of the country and from the same business principles which made it great in one respect will make it great in the other.

Michigan has approximately 200,000 acres under orchard and yet is shipping apples into the state simply because the orchards are not properly cared for.

In changing from the natural fruit of the country to more improved varieties we have seemed numerous pests and diseases as well as the better fruit and have failed to treat either the diseases or the fruits properly and are failing to produce a product of good quality.

Mr. Bassett says that over 57,000 barrels of No. 1 apples were shipped from the county in which he lives and that they received a little better prices than any other section on account of the fact that many buyers were so badly fooled that they could be every cent

FOR SHERIF'S BOYS.

Filby Pared Charlevoix Scrappers Win a Boat With Washington Authorities.

The SENTINEL is receipt of a letter from Mrs. "Hub" Shrier, dated Washington, D. C., in which the mother of the boy author, as well known here, relates how they won out with the authorities.

Up to last week the Shrier's have been unable to obtain a permit for the boys to box in public, but finally an appeal was made to the board of commissioners. For five days the board had the case under consideration. They finally granted the permit, and the members of the board witnessed the "bout" as guests. The following clippings from Washington papers explain the case:

Young Shrier, of Washington, and the Mysterious Don, of Michigan, the two young bacteria-weight scrappers who appeared at a public board hearing to get a permit to "go on" in a three-round boxing act at a live-rent theatre, won the coveted "license" from the commissioners yesterday after a neat piece of foot-work. Young Shrier is light years old.

The Mysterious Don is a nine years old.

* * *

Armed with a pair of well-padded boxing gloves, which they showed to the commissioners, the pugilists exploited that it was not their intention to engage in any brutal exhibition, but merely to appear in a friendly sparring match.

They do not purpose, they said, to offend the most cultured of Washington's population. In proof of this assertion, their father, who is their manager, produced a number of press clippings referring to them as the most gentlemanly of fighters.

The commissioners evinced interest in the request, but became of an adverse report from C. U. Estes, inspector under the child labor law, it was decided to make a further investigation.

In private life, the pugilists are pupils of the Webster school.

Interest in Washington is centered today in the proposed battle between "Mysterious Don, of Michigan," and "Young Shrier, of Washington."

The pugilists, with their parents, appeared before the commissioners this morning to make application for a permit to put off the bout at one of the local theatres.

Assuming in front of the table, where the commissioners were seated, it was with some difficulty that the fighters were seen. "Mysterious Don" is nine years old, and "Young Shrier," who in private life, is his brother, is a year younger. Both are small for their years.

* * *

Young Shrier, of Washington, and Mysterious Don, of Michigan, a pair of young scrappers, who combined are scarcely more bigger than an Jeffries' weight right size, appeared before the board of commissioners this morning and, after a stiffy three-round battle, got a "draw" as a decision. The young scrappers were there after a permit to "go on" in one of the live-real theatres and had their mitts and trainers with them.

It looked like a knockout for a few minutes, but as the pugilists were soon after had been held up the first time at the suggestion of Commissioner West that the commissioners will that order, the young men was before either sending a knockout blow or throwing up the sponge themselves.

Young Shrier, of Washington, and the Mysterious Don are really a pair of schoolboys—brothers—averaging about eight and a half years apiece, who go to the Webster school right here in this city, and who have real names, which be rendered dull of every morning, in fact, totally unconscious that they are disputing the inequities of a couple of pretty young brother weights.

The boys do a boxing act which is said to be very brutal by those who have never seen it. In fact, one of these young counters to the other's eye with a glove almost as big as a pillow and once in a while knocks him down.

Frequently one of them taps the other a hard in the little stomach that both of them laugh immoderately and lose their breath. Being about fifty pounds apiece in weight, they are almost in the great bollermaker's class as weight lifters.

The commissioners asked the fighters great many questions, but, like the an article, the two principals referred everything to their manager, Mrs. Mrs. Hub.

The estate of David Ward manufactured last year at its big saw mill at Onward 22,119,140 feet of pine and 3,39,215 feet of hemlock, a total of 26,458,355 feet. It also manufactured 1,838,000 pieces of lath and 1,115,000 shingles. The output of this mill is probably the largest of any Michigan saw mill last year, and by far the largest at pine lumber.

Won't Need a Crutch.

When Editor J. P. Sossman, of Corsicana, N. C., bruised his leg badly, it started an ugly sore. Many salves and liniments proved worthless. Then Bucklen's Arnica Salve healed it thoroughly. What a Traveling Man Says.

Aaron H. Gates, who to Charlevoix people is probably the best known traveling man who strikes the town, was here Monday and called at the sanctum, as he has been doing for twenty years. Mr. Gates sells cigars for a big Cleveland factory. Following is the substance of a brief interview:

Mr. Gates, in the dry counties how does your trade compare with what you did when they were wet?

"I have sold more goods than I did before local option was adopted."

"Did not the drop off in saloon trade reduce your orders?"

"I never sold saloons," he replied, "I have learned from long experience that the smoker will smoke. Where formerly he bought his cigars at a saloon, he now gets them at the cigar stand or the drug store. He smokes more than he did before because he has more money to spend than he did when he was buying drinks. And I think that every legitimate business is affected the same way."

Mr. Gates thinks the adoption of prohibition was the best thing Charlevoix county ever did, from a business as well as a moral standpoint.

A Very Small View of It.

An argument that is being used against Chase S. Osborn as a candidate for governor is that Auditor General Fuller, of the upper peninsula is but a first termer, and is entitled to a re-election, and that with this "hop to Cerebus" the upper counties should be satisfied.

Based upon comparative wealth and population the upper peninsula should be entitled to governor, auditor general and another good plum besides. Based upon the law of political compensation the northern peninsula has earned even better than that.

Mr. Fuller himself is an ardent Osborn adherent, and Osborn is Fuller's warm personal friend.

In the light of state political history and the figures in the record book there is little danger of the upper peninsula being overpaid with offices.

Wexford county local option forces were organized last week. Resolutions from every grange in the county and a petition signed by 3,900 women favoring local option were read.

According to an item in the Cadillac Evening News, the G. H. & I. railway will receive about the first of March, five new locomotives, of the largest type which will be used in handling heavy freight trains.

Farmers of that vicinity held a meeting here and took the first steps toward the organization of the Frankfort Fruit Growers' association. The special aim of the association will be the booming of cherry growing, Benzie county being noted for the large, luscious cherries such as are used in cocktails, rivaling the California fruit.

Boyne Journal: Some time last November two checks, which came into the First National Bank, were found to have been forged. The work was traced to Nelson Knapp Jr., of Hortons Bay, a young man formerly of good character and son of eminently respectable parents. Young Knapp left the country and the bank people kept the affair out of the papers but meanwhile placed the case in the hands of the sheriff and reported it to the detective department of the American Bankers' Association, sending them a photo of the young man. By this and other means the party wanted has been located in Plymouth, Penn., and Sheriff McWain left for that place today to bring the fellow home. This incident shows how useless it is to try to escape from the clutches of the law.

BAD APPLE PACKING

Apple Growers Protest Against Dishonest Packing Methods.

A recent Traverse City special says: Wrought up by stories which have been polished regarding the prevalence of crookedness in the packing of Michigan fruits, Grand Traverse apple growers, through the instrumentality of their grange, instituted an investigation as to the causes of this unfortunate condition of affairs and have come out with a statement in which they lay the blame principally upon the buyers.

At a meeting of the grange the other night it is said that practically every fruit grower present admitted that he had packed small apples in the center of the barrel and large ones at the end, having acted according to the instructions of the apple buyers.

The grange adopted the following resolutions:

"Resolved, that it is the opinion of Grand Traverse grange No. 379, Patrons of Husbandry, that the apple buyers and commission men are largely responsible for the dishonestly packed apples."

"Be it further resolved by Grand Traverse grange No. 379, Patrons of Husbandry, that it be the sense of the grange that an effort be made to have none but fancy and No. 1 fruits grown in this region to warrant the phrase, 'Grand Traverse fruit,' both far and near stand for something extra good as to quality."

During the discussion, one of the grangers stated that several years ago he made a rule to pack apples uniform, placing his name, grade and guarantee upon the barrels, so that if the apples were not as represented he would replace them. He, however, had received no extra returns and also stated that the packers discouraged this method.

Several testified that they had seen the Chicago buyers last fall make as many barrels as possible by picking up and the small fruit from the ground and using only the large fruit for the ends of the barrels. One grower stated that by using the windfalls, one buyer had secured 1,000 more barrels of apples than the buyer himself had estimated. The object is to buy at cider apple prices and sell for fancy goods.

High School Notes.

The H. S. students and normal class listened to a very interesting talk Friday afternoon, by Carl D. Thompson.

A junior lyceum will be held in the H. S. assembly room, Friday evening, Feb. 18. The program will be as follows: Piano duet, Helen and Dorothy Armstrong.

Recitation, Hazel Mills.

Vocal duet, Irene Finucan and Anna Madill.

Admission 10 cents.

Clarence Wood is taking commercial work.

The East Jordan basket ball team will play their return game with Charlevoix Saturday evening, Feb. 19th, at the opera house. A preliminary game will be played by the normal and H. S. girls.

The seniors are at work on their H. S. Annual which will be published in April.

Joseph Aligire, a Indiana county farmer, in the fall of 1909, secured 4,000 bushels of corn from a single 40-acre field. Not only was the quantity factor in the yield large, but the quality was also good. These facts would seem to indicate that western Michigan can produce corn and potatoes at a profit. The average yield per acre for the state of Michigan for the past 48 years is but a little over 31 bushels, and the average yield for the United States for the same period is but a trifle over 25 bushels. The difference between 31 and 100 bushels indicates what western Michigan soil and western Michigan climate can do when brains are mixed with them.

—F. J. Meech and wife are visiting friends in Grand Rapids.

—Elmer Johnson is visiting relatives in and near Saginaw this week.

—Capt. Wm. Hulmes and family went to Detroit last week, where it is their intention to reside.

—Mrs. Tollman, who has spent the past year here with her daughter, Mrs. Forrest Blanchard, returns to Chicago this week.

—Sims Clarke, who has a position in Chicago, spent a few days last week in this city with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jon. Clarke.

—Mrs. John Wilkers and daughter left Tuesday for Kalamazoo to visit relatives. From there Mrs Wilkers will go to Chicago for hospital treatment.

—The public is cordially invited to attend a hot supper given by the Eastern Stars at their dining hall March 2nd, from 5:30 to 7:00. Supper 25 cents—a good time is expected.

—The storing of ice still continues The big houses are about all full and sealed for summer, but there is considerable activity yet among the smaller houses. The ice is of exceptionally fine quality.

—It can be said that Wednesday morning was the coldest of the winter thus far. Thermometers of varying veracity recorded the mercury at from 10 to 14 degrees below zero. Our personal observations place it at ten.

—Ed Ingram, the No. 5 surfman at the life saving station, has resigned to come to a ranch which a kind old grandmother gave him in Oregon. David Wing comes from Montague to fill his place at No. 5. He is a promotee surfman Fred Marsh from No. 7 to No. 6.

—Attorneys Knowles and Harris of Boyne City, Gaylord and East Jordan, Shanahan of Charlevoix, and other lawyers, arrayed themselves before Judge Mayne Monday in the civil case against Herman L. Swift to compell him to convey title of the Beulah Home property to the board of trustees of that institution. After quite extended argument, pro and con, the hearing was adjourned to Saturday of this week.

—The following is an extract from a letter written by Bob Jarvis, who is attending Principia Park School, St. Louis, Mo. "I know you will be pleased to hear that at our first open drill my squad won the pennant. But the best news of all for you is that the teachers and school officers are going to pay me a salary for next year and the officers have promised me a position as teacher from them on to enable me to graduate and pay up my indebtedness to the school. I now have a class in physical culture besides my other work.

—Chicago will next spring, under a local option law, vote upon the question of the banishment of every saloon within its limits. Last week an enormous petition bearing 75,000 names (14,000 more than necessary) was filed by the anti saloon forces, so the question is sure to be submitted. This means one third of the voters of Chicago are now known to be in sympathy with the movement to expel the liquor traffic. Already much more than half the extent of the city territorially is "dry" under operation of this same local option law, and almost all of the adjoining suburban cities are also without saloons.

—W. R. C. meets Thursday, Feb. 24th. Don't forget.

—The W. R. C. pot luck at Mrs. Lona Cram's, Feb. 17th, was a great success. Everybody had a good time.

—Frank N. Clark, superintendent of U. S. fish hatcheries, was in the city Monday, inspecting the work at the local hatchery.

—Married, Tuesday evening, at the house of the bride in this city, by Rev. F. D. Hole, Mr. Harker Kirby and Miss Mary Tysver, both of this city.

—Capt. P. D. Campbell and wife returned home Saturday, after a two weeks absence in Chicago and other points, visiting friends and relatives.

—Information comes that Mrs. Byron See, of Detroit, formerly a resident of this place, is so seriously ill that she cannot possibly live but a short time.

—Every fruit grower in Western Michigan is entitled to a copy of the booklet, "Marketing the Apple," and much copy may be had by enclosing with the request a one-cent stamp to cover the postage. Address, Western Michigan Development Bureau, Traverse City, Mich.

—According to the recently adopted by-laws of the Western Michigan Development Bureau the official seal of the Bureau is a diamond with the name of the bureau around the edges and the sentiment "A Farmer for Every Forty" in the center. This will be used upon the legal documents of the corporation.

—The Lansing Journal is one of the latest of the influential newspapers of Michigan to come out in favor of local option. The Journal has made an investigation in various counties where local option prevails and has found that the law is being very well enforced and is proving generally satisfactory. The moral atmosphere is better, drunkenness and crime is on the decrease.

—Jerry Harry, for several years one of the most successful farmers in Charlevoix county, but for years past were for Saskatchewan, N. W. T., where he has bought land. The loss of such a farmer as Mr. Harry cannot fail to be felt, and his departure causes sincere regret, not only in Marion but in Charlevoix, where he has many friends. Jerry Harry is a good citizen under any flag.

—The Charlevoix Dramatic Club has the grand musical farce comedy "Waves of the Orient," which they have been diligently working on for past three months, in nearly ready for the public. There are twelve grand chorus of twenty voices, several solos and duets of an operatic nature, dances, etc. The wardrobe used in this play will be the most beautiful ever seen in the city. Watch for date some time in March.

—Grand Rapids Herald: These are troublesome times for the congressmen. Each one of them has a light on his hands in some way or other. Postoffices are the things which trouble most. Congressman Dodds has three little noodles in his district. At Lake City and Carson City he has real healthy fights and at Charlevoix there is said to be sore feeling. The way of the congressman in dealing out postoffice appointments is truly hard.

—We fear the SENTINEL will be written down as a poor prophet, inasmuch as last week's prediction that there would be no mail communication with Beaver Island this winter. Even as we wrote the mail was well across the channel, arriving at Cross Village Wednesday evening, leaving for the island again Thursday morning, and arriving at St. James the same evening. Both the carrier were compelled to take the circuitous route via Grass Island and Waugenhause, on account of open water. They left the island again Friday morning, making a successful crossing and reaching St. James again Saturday night, which indicates better ice conditions. We mind make no more predictions, but there will undoubtedly be several more trips made.

Masonic Home Burned.

The Michigan Masonic Home, located in East Grand Rapids, a three-story brick structure, erected in 1890, burned Wednesday morning of last week. The loss is $65,000 with an insurance of $25,000. The sixty eight inmates escaped safely, but all they were able to save from the building was the clothes they wore. The fire started in a refuse chute in the attic.

The SENTINEL received the news by wire Wednesday afternoon after its forms were closed. A most singular coincidence the fact that we had just learned of the disaster when past grand master John Rowson, of Grand Rapids, entered the office. He had just been advised by telephone of the loss.

Mr. Rowson is vice president of the Masonic Home Association, and chairman of the executive board. He was confident that the Home will be rebuilt.

While the Masonic Home Association is an independent corporation, it is under the protection of the grand lodge, grand chapter, grand council and grand commandery, with the first named body as chief guardian. It is supported by a per capita tax upon the Master Masons of the State.

Frank N. Clark, of Northville, is well known in Charlevoix, is a member of the board of control.

A Long Time Ago.

It was forty-one years ago this week that the writer of this a boy of but little more than twenty-one, packed the material and primative machinery with which to print the SENTINEL, and took it north from Traverse City.

It is an old, old story, which to many is yet interesting, because they shared with the pioneer paper the privations and discouragements that attached to that early period. On the other hand there are those of the new generation who know nothing and care less what forty-one years of faithful effort means.

As the SENTINEL enters upon the last decade of the first half century it is conscious it owes nothing in the retrospect of which it need be ashamed. It has always been true to itself—and that means that it has been true to people, to its party, its section, its county, and to every interest of the town in which it was born. It has always stood for civic and social decency.

From the beginning the SENTINEL has helped to gather the straw and tread the clay for the bricks with which the foundation and the superstructure of "Charlevoix the Beautiful" has been built. It has wrought in the quarries and hewn the hunters by the side of many—very many—of those who have gone before.

We think we are justified in saying that the SENTINEL has always been a good paper, that it has tried to require of its patrons a fair price for its publication, and that it has been a good citizen.

My room mate and myself have a very efficient receiving set with which we hear all the stations mentioned, also hear Key West occasionally, Wilmington, Delaware; Washington, D. C., Cape Hatteras, N. C.; Philadelphia, Boston, besides many of the liners which are equipped by the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. The offices of the wireless companies are all centered here in New York—The Radio Co., United Co., Marconi Co., Telefunken Co.

One of the best stations that has ever been erected is the 35 Kilowatt station in the Brooklyn navy yard which is not in use at the present.

I beg to remain, yours truly,
CLARENCE J. WITHERS.

Henry Blocker Dead.

Henry Blocker, age d 54, a former mayor of Grand Haven, is dead after a long illness with Bright's decease in that city. Mr. Blocker came to Grand Haven direct from Germany in 1867 and had been a resident ever since. He conducted a marine engine and and machine shop and for ten years was United States inspector of marine boilers at Grand Haven. He is survived by four sons and one daughter besides his widow. Three sons and the daughter reside in Grand Haven.

Mr. Blocker was well known in Charlevoix. Not only was he frequently here as inspector, but, after retiring from that service, he was employed one year in the machine shop of O. S. Washburn & Son.

A WIRELESS STUDENT

Interesting Letter From Clarence Withers, Who is Studying Wireless Telegraphy

153 West 15th Street, New York City, N.Y., Feb. 15, 1910.

Dear Editor:

I take pleasure in writing you a few particulars about the American Wireless Institute, of which I am a student.

The first course is what is called the practical course, in which is taught telegraphy by means of an instrument called an audophone, designed and patented by F. E. Butler, president of the A. W. I. In this instrument there is a regular Morse key, a telephone head set, and a tuner, by means of which the signals can be cut down so they hardly perceptible. There is drawing of all different circuits and diagrams of apparatus needed in wireless work.

The Instructor is George L. Durand, formerly of Oberlin, Ohio. He became an operator at the age of 14 years and has been an operator for 35 years. He was formerly with the L. S. & M. S. Ry. For a year and a half he was Associated Press operator for the old Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph, at Cleveland. Later he served ten years on the Chicago Board of Trade, and later went with the Postal company. For the last ten years he has been president of the Oberlin School of Telegraphy.

There about 30 in the school at present. The students come from all parts of the country. There are three from Michigan. One from Grand Rapids, two from Detroit and one from Charlevoix the Beautiful. There are students from Nebraska, Minnesota, Illinois, Indiana, Virginia, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Maryland and New York. There are about a dozen from Brooklyn.

In the wireless engineering class there are about 15 students. It is in this class that we have to dig in. Fred A. Kolster is the instructor in this course. He worked for nine years with Stone company and is one of the best men in the wireless field today. We get the high lessons of mathematics such as trig, algebra, calculus.

The fundamental theories of wave motion and the primary parts of wireless calculation up to the most advanced branches of this work. Other parts of this course is the designing of apparatus for different purposes. I have recently designed a receiving set, that is selective to the highest degree, giving a choice of selection points, also designing switchboards, transformers, condensers, helices spark gaps, loose couplers etc., certain, loudness. We also calibrate condensers and inductances. By the use of standards in the laboratory we measure to the 01 per cent of the correct capacity or inductances. We have practical work in hooking up all kinds of sending and receiving sets, soldering, antennae construction. We have a DeForrest wireless telephone, also receiving outfit for home.

The principal wireless stations around New York are those located at the Brooklyn navy yard, 30th St. and 6th Avenue, 42 Broadway and Manhattan Beach and Hotel Pastor, all United Wireless Company's stations. One of the largest long distance stations in the Radio Station in Metropolitan Tower which gives them a height of almost 700 feet.

My room mate and myself have a very efficient receiving set with which we hear all the stations mentioned, also hear Key West occasionally, Wilmington, Delaware; Washington, D. C., Cape Hatteras, N. C.; Philadelphia, Boston, besides many of the liners which are equipped by the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. The offices of the wireless companies are all centered here in New York—The Radio Co., United Co., Marconi Co., Telefunken Co.

One of the best stations that has ever been erected is the 35 Kilowatt station in the Brooklyn navy yard which is not in use at the present.

I beg to remain, yours truly,
CLARENCE J. WITHERS.

The Wand of Sleep
OR
The Devil-Stick

By the Author of
"The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," Etc.

CHAPTER VIII.—(Continued.)

"Perhaps I may settle affairs sooner than you think!" said Ethwald to his boy. I wouldn't be back in dinner to-night, so I leave you in the Doctor's care."

"What about?"

"Business connected with the devil-stick and Isabella."

"Isa. You are pleased to be rude, I see, and I don't like it. Anyway, I'm sick of everything to-day."

"Because I may fail," said Maurice. "Here, I'm off. Jen, can't you be pleasant? Will you wait for me? I'll be back in a quarter of an hour, and I'm sure you will see and appreciate my silence to-night."

"Well," said Jen, with a shrug, "you are odd, Maurice, and I don't understand you. But I must say that I don't like to be left out of things, and I don't like two days in this away."

"You'll understand everything to-morrow."

"About Devil-stick?"

"Perhaps Jen again promises you that will be right, when I come back."

"When?" cried Jen, "do you know why Dadd has gone to town?"

"No. Do you know?"

"Because Aylmer has promised to marry Isabella."

Maud and Maurice both being absent, Major Jen was compelled to dine alone. He was not in the mood for hurrying over his dinner with all speed to return himself to Ethwald's side, so he ordered "Bordeaux" to accompany the meal, and he drank a comfortable chair near the open window, and attempted to read, but the succulent influence of the evening air, upon him, he dozed soon in the good Major snore sound asleep.

Outside a warm, still air blowing, and the city was filled with the perfumes of flowers, the darkening sky briefly a cloud could be seen, and the moon, just showing her rim above the tree tops, flooded the still lovely scene in the lights with a clear wave of cold light. All was full of silence, stillness and peace, and the magic of moonlight, when suddenly a long, wild cry struck shoddbrilliantly through the silence.

Awakened as an old campaigner is alleged to do, Major Jen was on his feet in an instant, and again, heard that terrible shriek. It seemed to come from the direction of the high-road, and thinking that some evil was befallen Jen, without loss of time, raced across the lawn and into the avenue. In a few minutes he arrived at the gates, and ran out into the white and dusty road; a thick mass was lying some distance down, and a dark thing ran Jen with an indefinable sense of evil creeping on his heartstrings. The black mass proved to be the body of a man—old and gray, and Jen turned the corpse over and recoiled. The dead man was Mr. Maurice Aylmer.

CHAPTER IX.

While the Major, hurrying aide to credit in a man, was hurrying to the dead body of his dear lad, Jaggard, attracted also by the piteous cry, came running up.

"What is it, sir?" he asked, stalking Jen even in that moment of horror. "I heard an awful cry, sir, and came after you."

Jen pointed to the corpse, but said nothing. Jaggard leaned over, and the truth, bent down to place a hand on the dead man's heart. Then he saw and recognized the face.

"Mr. Maurice! What does it mean?" he cried, excited with sudden horror.

"It means murder, Jaggard!" replied Jen, in a hollow voice which he hardly recognized as his own. "Mr. Maurice went to Dartmouth for dinner, and now—" the Major pointed again to the remains.

"Murder!" echoed Jaggard, his ruddy face some pale, and a little awed, too.

"I don't know—I can't say!" interrupted his master, impatiently. "Go and get the men to carry this poor stretcher for the body, and send the groom for Dr. Bennet at once."

"Shall I not take sir?"

"Do as I tell you," said Jen, so strongly that Jaggard did not dare to demur, but ran off, leaving the Major alone with his dead.

The road which ran past "Ashantee" towards The Wigwam was lonely even in the daytime, and at this hour of the night it was quite deserted. No a person was in sight, although the Major could see up and down the road for a considerable distance, owing to the bright moonlight. He raised Maurice in his arms, and placed the body on the soft grass by the roadside.

In the bright moonlight he carefully examined the body, but could find no trace of any wound until he came to the right hand. Here, in the palm, he saw a ragged rent plotted with blood, but it was a mere scratch not likely to have caused death, unless poison were—Here Major Jen broke from his feet with a new and terrible idea in his brain.

"The devil-stick!" he said, alone.

Again he bent down and examined the torn and bleeding body very swiftly and discovered; he tore open the shirt at the neck, and saw that the young man's throat was all discolored and bruised. Undoubtedly the cause of death was blood-poisoning, and the devil-stick had been the implement used to effect the deed. But here the problem presented itself, who had killed Maurice? The person who had stolen the devil-stick? Who had stolen the devil-stick? The person who—Major Jen came to an abrupt pause. He could think, for a moment, of no reason to the question; but it is our fair to say that, dazed by the terrible occurrence of his home-life death, Jen had not his wits about him.

While he was still considering the case, he was disturbed by Jaggard's reappearance with the men from "Ashantee" carrying a stretcher. While they placed the body of Maurice thereon, the groom leaned for businesslike speech, addressed his master, and Major Jen stopped the man to tell him of the sad news that was to bring back Dr. Etwald with him. Jaggard was shocked at this, for Maurice—poor lad—was being all alright, and—did gentlemen have committed the crime, and he asked for the out of Dr. Etwald to explain that present. In the meantime the necessities of the case called the immediate removal of the lad to "Ashantee." It was a melancholy procession which bore the body up to the house; and behind came Major Jen, with his head sunk with pathos. Thus, but I must say that I don't like to be dragged into the complicated two lives in this away.

"Yes! Do not trouble to dear reader."

"About Devil-stick!"

"Perhaps Jen again promises you that will be right when I come back."

"When?" cried Jen, "do you know why Dadd has gone to town?"

"No. Do you know?"

"Because Aylmer has promised to marry Isabella."

Maud and Maurice both being absent, Major Jen was compelled to dine alone. He was not in the mood for hurrying over his dinner with all speed to return himself to Ethwald's side, so he ordered "Bordeaux" to accompany the meal, and he drank a comfortable chair near the open window, and attempted to read, but the succulent influence of the evening air upon him, he dozed soon in the good Major snore sound asleep.

Outside a warm, still air blowing, and the city was filled with the perfumes of flowers, the darkening sky briefly a cloud could be seen, and the moon, just showing her rim above the tree tops, flooded the still lovely scene in the lights with a clear wave of cold light. All was full of silence, stillness and peace, and the magic of moonlight, when suddenly a long, wild cry struck shoddbrilliantly through the silence.

Awakened as an old campaigner is alleged to do, Major Jen was on his feet in an instant, and again, heard that terrible shriek. It seemed to come from the direction of the high-road, and thinking that some evil was befallen Jen, without loss of time, raced across the lawn and into the avenue. In a few minutes he arrived at the gates, and ran out into the white and dusty road; a thick mass was lying some distance down, and a dark thing ran Jen with an indefinable sense of evil creeping on his heartstrings. The black mass proved to be the body of a man—old and gray, and Jen turned the corpse over and recoiled. The dead man was Mr. Maurice Aylmer.

CHAPTER IX.

While the Major, hurrying aide to credit in a man, was hurrying to the dead body of his dear lad, Jaggard, attracted also by the piteous cry, came running up.

"What is it, sir?" he asked, stalking Jen even in that moment of horror. "I heard an awful cry, sir, and came after you."

Jen pointed to the corpse, but said nothing. Jaggard leaned over, and the truth, bent down to place a hand on the dead man's heart. Then he saw and recognized the face.

"Mr. Maurice! What does it mean?" he cried, excited with sudden horror.

"It means murder, Jaggard!" replied Jen, in a hollow voice which he hardly recognized as his own. "Mr. Maurice went to Dartmouth for dinner, and now—" the Major pointed again to the remains.

"Murder!" echoed Jaggard, his ruddy face some pale, and a little awed, too.

"I don't know—I can't say!" interrupted his master, impatiently. "Go and get the men to carry this poor stretcher for the body, and send the groom for Dr. Bennet at once."

"Shall I not take sir?"

"Do as I tell you," said Jen, so strongly that Jaggard did not dare to demur, but ran off, leaving the Major alone with his dead.

The road which ran past "Ashantee" towards The Wigwam was lonely even in the daytime, and at this hour of the night it was quite deserted. No a person was in sight, although the Major could see up and down the road for a considerable distance, owing to the bright moonlight. He raised Maurice in his arms, and placed the body on the soft grass by the roadside.

In the bright moonlight he carefully examined the body, but could find no trace of any wound until he came to the right hand. Here, in the palm, he saw a ragged rent plotted with blood, but it was a mere scratch not likely to have caused death, unless poison were—Here Major Jen broke from his feet with a new and terrible idea in his brain.

"Dido I mean,[illegible] but hel' who is Jen?"

"Ah, that is what we wish to find out," said the doctor, gravely. "But how do I know? Relirrem may be the thief."

"The thief and the murderer!"

"Well, no. Major, on second thoughts I do—I think it is wise to couple these two words as yet. The thief may not be the murderer—but what can I say? broke off Etwald, suddenly. "As you was know nothing. It is late now, Major, and I must get back. Shall I give information to the police?"

"If you will be so kind," said the Major, listlessly, and he let the doctor go, busy without another word.

All through that long night he hunt beside the bed upon which lay the corpse of the man whom he had loved as a son. The Major was broken-hearted by the sorrow which had come upon him, for, when he heard from the chamber of death he looked years old—and that was he entered it.

Fortunately it was not forced, to sorrow alone; towards midday David arrived from town, filled with grief and surprise at the untimely end of Maurice. He found the Major in the library, and grasped him by the hand with genuine sorrow.

"My poor uncle," he said, in a low voice. "I cannot tell you what I felt when Etwald telegraphed to me the first thing in the morning, and I came down by the earliest train there was. Poor Maurice—and so paired in death!"

"Maurice's pals," sighed Jen, leaning upon the shoulder of Sorry, "and you cherish my anger in your heart still."

"Heaven forbid, sir!"

David spoke so forcibly that Jen was plainly he meant what he said, and the massive face of the young man looked warm and forgiveness in the searching light of the morning, and whatever country the love of the home woman had sown between him and the Major, it was not to be denied that he was suffering cruelly from remorse at their unhappy difference. Jen was sorry, but even in his sorrow grief he could not forbear a sneer.

"You can marry Isabella now," he said, bitterly.

"Not!" said David, faintly, turning his face away. "At least not yet."

The Major looked at this for a moment, then, with a tone deep in his head, he took David's hand in his, and led him into the chamber of death.

"Swear," said he, "that you will not leave Jen Jaggs until you have discovered and punished the murderer of Maurice."

HOW TO GROW MISTLETOE.

Parasitical Plant May Be Grafted or Sown on Various Trees.

The mistletoe is a parasite; that is to say, it draws its supplies of food from the tree on which it grows, and which, therefore, weakens it to some extent; but when there is only a plant or two on a strong tree the effect cannot be very serious.

Curiously enough, though the mistletoe is traditionally associated with the oak, it is very rarely found on that tree, says the Dundee Courier. It is most common on the apple and not uncommon on the lime, the mountain ash, the hawthorn and the maple.

In the north of France it is cultivated on a large scale and it is chiefly from that source that we get the immense quantities of it that generally appear in the markets shortly before Christmas.

The mistletoe is not sufficient to grow, but its progress is very slow. It may be raised from seed or grafted, or from one on which it is already established may be obtained from seedlings.

When these berries are used, care should be taken in selecting a few seeds that these are extracted only from the least shaped white berries. They will be well matured and suitable for propagation. The seeds may be prepared out from the berry by pressing the latter between the thumb and forefinger.

In selecting a suitable spot among the branches of a tree for the reception of the mistletoe seed it is advisable to choose a sheltered bed in order to the seed in an artificially made crevice. This may be made in several ways.

Either either be a plain horizontal cut in the bark or it may be triangular in shape.

The seed can then be squeezed into its place and if it be thought necessary to protect it from the depredations of birds a piece of fine wire gauze or linen can be fastened over the crevice.

A word of warning is, however, necessary. Failure may follow if an attempt be made to sow the seed at once. The seed does not become thoroughly ripe for at least two months after Christmas. It is a good plan, therefore, to select a few of the ripest seeds and, to preserve them in a cool place until the proper time for sowing arrives.

The mistletoe owes its Latin and botanical name, viscum, to the strength or holding power of its glutinous juice, and when the juice hardens, as the result of exposure to the air, the seeds are firmly attached to the branch. They germinate during the following year, but, as previously stated, development is slow.

Some time may be saved by graft ing. A small sprig is trimmed at the base, as in whip grafting, and is inserted in a downward slit made in but not quite through the bark. Clay should be used to exclude the air, and, though the sprig should be tied with sufficient firmness to prevent any movement of its base, it should not be so tight as to stop the circulation of sap.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

DON'T FOLLOW THE CROWD.

Thus shall not follow a multitude to do evil—Exodus 23:2.

The ordinance in the book of Exodus is an evidence of that wisdom which hailed Moses as the greatest statesman of ancient days. The warning of the old old command is simply, "Don't follow the crowd." The point of the city is the excess of the instinct of association. Civilization, progress is the growth and development of the associate life of man, but the peril of city life is that this instinct is overdone.

People hate to be alone. What proportion of the mental sickness of a football match would exist for an hour or more in the wind and rain if each man were isolated from the rest of the crowd and saw only the players? In spite of only dirt and disease, crowded life in the great cities are growing at an enormous rate, while the towns and villages are diminishing. Sin hasten to be in the crowd is one of the most serious developments in modern civilization. "New York is not a civilization; it is a great railway station." The inner quality of association is a way life to do as the crowd does. The temptation of Broadway, which in Jesus' ministry sanctified, ennobled, purified, transformed to righteous aspiration.

The highest achievement is not to be carried along in the crowd. It is astonishing how far we are influenced by the passions and opinions of our fellows. Fear of unpopularity, desire to be one with the rest, has led many a conscience far astray. Obviously those who follow others seem to have no boldness of their own. They lose the power of independent judgment, the courage and disposition for personal initiative, and finally the sense of personal obligation.

This is the kind of atmosphere in which many are living today, easier, restless to be in the current of things where the crowd, the fashion, the fear of the one, the mass identity is lost and his personality merged in the great composite. Some generations ago earlier Israel uttered a warning and command which has been more effective than to day: "Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil." Redolence is present in the Christian life as the same total of the forces that resist death. Resistance is life. In the continental force which keeps the planet from flying of into space there operates the law of resistance, whose miracle is the secret of creation. In the moral and spiritual world the secret of life is the might of one's resistance.

When one's power of resistance, ability and obligation is lost, his release is gone, and when his resistance is gone, he is no longer a man. Follow not the crowd, but the challenge of duty and call, for it is the man to the whole of life and veritably the man to the whole of life and veritably eating mankind, slowly building up communities and states into order and power, slowly but surely advancing.

THE AMBITIOUS MAN.

By Rev. Vance, D. D.

Text.—"Then there arose a reasoning among them, which of them should be the greatest."—Luke 9:46.

"The Ambitious Man" is a portrait of the disciples in the Christ. Jesus had lost for place and power his talked possession of the twelve. For the time being they are blind to the spiritual facts of Christ's kingdom. The holy voices of the beatitudes are drowned in a jargon of strife. The Master himself falls to set an effective restraint or rebuke to these ambition-driven men. They do not seem to consider their fitness for the high places they seek. It does not occur to them that weightier responsibilities attach to positions of larger trust. In their blame scramble for place and power are blind to all save self-promotion. Not even the lesson of the little child, and now, crowding against each other, in selfish haste, they come to Jesus with the question, "Who is as shall be the greatest?"

Ambition is commonly one's duty to make the most of himself and his opportunities. The absence of aspiration of this kind is an unspeakable calamity. It makes the difference between a dead man and a living man. If the parable of the talents means anything it is that God expects everyone to do his best. It is not this to do as the crowd does. The temptation of Broadway, which in Jesus' ministry sanctified, ennobled, purified, transformed to righteous aspiration.

"The highest achievement is not to be carried along in the crowd. It is astonishing how far we are influenced by the passions and opinions of our fellows. HIS BUMPS.

The Explanation Given by the Book on Phrenology.

They were newly married and were rolling down one of the streets of the little New York suburbs with pleasure upon the occasion of their wedding day. The bridegroom, spurred on neither, home to this short purchase by and told how his wife had discovered two very prominent bumps on the back of his head. He was proud of them. He was also fond of his wife and around the bumps he had lavished fond fee bumps and kisses of their existence. They was engrossed.

"My boss on phrenology says that they mean good memory and generosity."

It was evident that she was proud of the fact, and so was he. But the back, using of an lingering turn of mind, walked in utterly blessed as he got down a phrenological work from one of his library, and he didn't much liker found the bumps on the chart. Terrible to the notion in read, seriously at first, then unusually. The little bumps outgrowing, and she was gone and said.

"Read it out loud. Please do!" And the boy read:

"These bumps are most frequently found on cats and monkeys."

Other bumps examined the remainder of the visit, which was brief.—New York Sun.

THE CABINET LEAK.

Daniel Webster Was Not Long in Discovering Its Source.

Once upon a time, when Daniel Webster was secretary of state, there was an important foreign matter up for discussion before the cabinet, and the almost secrecy was of course maintained. But the whole thing was discussed about in a few hours after the cabinet meeting. So the president hastily sent for his cabinet to talk over this leak. Each man had a different line of it.

Finally Mr. Webster arose, saying, "You, gentlemen, go on with your discussion, and I'll be back in a minute."

In a few minutes he returned and repeated every word that had been spoken for the hour in his absence. He explained that he had slipped down to the door outside the cabinet room you had your ear to it you could not distinguish one intelligible word, but it nothing was from the door and a little to one side upon a certain spot in the carpet you kept and you could see every word as plainly heard as though whispered. Some entertaining eavesdropper had been experimenting with the door and had found that upon that exact spot there was some acoustic property of the door or room that conveyed the sound in perfect entirety.

"Gong—Gong—"

The auctioneer had mispronounced for the last time, for he was very ill and lay now almost at death's door.

Beside the bed stood the doctor and the auctioneer's wife, anxiously watching each symptom, each movement each expression.

"Doctor," hoarsely whispered the hammer wielder's wife, "what is his pulse, is it?"

The Doctor raised the patient's wrist "His pulse" he answered, "is not going at all."

The auctioneer sat up excitedly in bed.

"Going at 1847" he cried briskly. "Going at 1847 going at 1847. Do I hear 1848 for a pulse that has been running steadily for fifty-one years and never once stopped yet? Going at 1847. What's quoted in 1848?"

But no one quoted it 1848. And a minute later the auctioneer was going—going—gone.

WASHED AWAY HIS HOME.

The Fortune That Came to a Man and His Clever Wife.

An Irishman named Whelan found a fortune in a very amusing way, says the Cape Town Argus. With the savings of a life he bought 100 far from Ballarat a few acres of ground, including a water pool and a sluggish spring. With the sand and gravel from the pool he made a little dam, built a cabin for himself and family, started a hut for the infants.

Quite contrary to their usual habits a colony of Chinamen living near by commenced to visit his bar every night. Then Mrs. Whelan discovered that some one had bit by bit carried off the sand, gravel and its surround bar wall so gradually that it had all most gone before she noticed it. Soon the chimney and the cabin walls also began to vanish. After a careful search Mrs. Whelan discovered that while one lot of Chinamen kept her husband busy in the bar another band was stealing the chimneys and walls.

Whelan knew the Chinamen were no fools, and, acting on his wife's suggestion, he also "stole a pan of dirt" from his own chimney and washed it out. Then he ordered tents for his family to live in and wanted away the entire house. It was literally built of gold dust. After that the good and the spring were also sold, and the dust sold was a big fortune for the lucky Irishman and his cute little wife.

THAIR FATHERS.

All Three Were Trimmers, but One Was a Star.

The story, long since familiar, of the little boy whose boast that his father had put a cupola on his house was copied by his playmate, who retorted proudly that his father had put up a mortgage on theirs, is revived to mind by an occurrence which was in the other day by a prominent publisher.

The small son of a man who was in business for reasons only he meeting into a new district went out and strolled up an acquaintance with the other kids of the same age who lived in the neighborhood. They were interested in the newcomer and began to try him out as to what his parents amounted to anyhow.

"My father is a window trimmer and an awfully big one," said the little kid.

"Ah, that's nothin'" said the second. "My father's a dump trimmer, and he's twice as big as yours."

It was plainly up to the stranger to make good. Act he did it with much gusto.

"My father is a pedestrian," he said, "and I heard a man tell him last night that he was the biggest trimmer in this ward."

And it was apparent to any one that the now kid had made a strong impression upon the neighborhood.—New York Herald.

Wood Too Hard to Burn.

There are certain kinds of wood that are too hard to burn or refuse to kindle for some other reason, such as lignum vitæ and the good brier root, but it is a curiosity to come across a piece of common deal—the soft, light wood of which so many boxes are made—that cannot be set fire to. The piece of wood in question was common white deal from Baltic, but was remarkable for its comparative weight. It had formed part of a boat belonging to a trader and had been dragged below the surface of the water to the depth of more than half a mile by a ferocious whale. The length of line and the sheer distance from the point of descent after being struck at which the whale came to the surface was a matter of no small depth to which it had dragged the boat. Only part of the boat came to land at the end of the line, and it was taken on board when a whole boat was towed home. Piece of wood was so hard that it would not burn in a set fire. The weight of water had compressed it.—London Standard.

How Eskimo Women Die.

On her first entrance to her new sod or snow an Eskimo woman is buoyed by hope of welcoming a son. When of her last lassoing to those narrow confines? She knows that the medicine man has decided that her sickness is mortal when she is laid upon her bed of snow. She gazes upon the rowdy drinking lamp beside her, upon food and drink set close at her hand. She has never lived once pass out of the doorway that needs no tunnel entrance, a whole year slips away, for presently the door is sealed with snow. The cold of death pierces through her enveloping furs. Her tough tissues that no long carrying will be here. The soul, comparabout with her, may enfresh itself with food; but, starving and freezing, her feeble body will not pass even that soul's departure and know that its hour has come to prefer.—Harper's Bazar.

Poetic Justice.

"Pa, did you ever hear of a real case of poetic justice?"

"Yes. A man who once enfeabled the out of $900 in an irrigation scheme died of water on the brain."—Chicago Record-Herald.

It is difficult to say who do you the most mischief, enemies with the worst intentions or friends with the best.—Lytton.

No Chance in History.

Mamma said that it is hard to believe that chance existed in history. "A crane may necessarily underlie every event, although for the moment it may appear as the result of apparently accidental circumstances. Is Alexander, a Cæsar, a Napoleon, are not the same of accident, but the inevitable product of the time and nation from which they spring. It was not Cæsar who destroyed the Roman republic. The republic was dead before Cæsar was. Sulla, Marius, Catiline preceded and foreshadowed Cæsar, but he gifted with more bright and greater genius, snatched the power from them and consolidated it in his own hands. For there was no doubt that he was fitter to rule than all the others put together. At the same time, supposing he had appeared 150 years earlier, he would not have succeeded in destroying the republic. When he came the life had passed out of it, and even Cæsar's death could not restore that."

Discontent.

"We are never completely happy," said the rosy moon publication. "Of course not," said the practical person. "A boy wishes he were a man so that he could have all the police he wants, and a man wishes he were a boy so that he could digest it."—Washington Star.

Victorian Gods.

If Thackeray, with a cynic twinkling fifty-eight and one-half senses, had the-largest head among Victorian writers who had the best features? The choice would seem to lie between Tennyson and Henry Taylor. "That man must be a poet," remarked one of a Chicago correspondence when he first saw Tennyson come into the hotel at Trinity, and another friend of sentiment his in his undergraduate days as six feet high, broad chested, strong limbed, his face Shakespeare's, with deep eyeline his forehead simply crowned with dark wavy hair; his head finely poised, his mind the simple result of sensitive, that time made prose too pretty with Tennyson, whereas Henry Taylor, nineteen a dirty, gutsiest looking man, seems to have grown singularly majestic with years. Grant Duff, meeting him when he was over eighty, says that "Taylor looking as fine dignifier than ever," and contemporary memoirs are full of references to his terrible appearance.—London Standard.

They Were "Over."

He was a regular patron of the restaurant. Perhaps that is why he felt justified in making clever remarks to the waitresses, remarks which they were paused to know how to answer at one day. However, the smallest and thinnest girl happened to be serving him trifling remarks, and it fell to her to answer him in kind.

"Bring me a chicken," he said, calling in into for dinner, "and some squash, and mouse—the same kind you passed me last—oven baked potatoes?"

"Baked potatoes are all over," said the girl.

He leaned back in his chair and glared at her quizzically.

"Baked potatoes all over are they?" he replied. "All over what?"

"With," she replied simply.—Youth's Companion.

"What's the matter, Sam?"

"I have just had a fight with Johnnie over divvin' the candy you gave us."

"Was there no one to take your part?"

"Yes; Johnnie took it."—Houston Post.

SERMON FROM SHAKESPEARE

(Copr. 1909 by Bradley-Garretson Co. Ltd.)

Self-love is not so vile a sin As self-neglecting.
Henry V., Act II., Sc. 4.

Self-love is used in this passage synonymously with pride. The Dauphin of France urges the French king to be the knight now of what a monarchy he is the head—to foster the strength of his vast kingdom. This self-love has made the British people what they are. It was national self-love that prompted old Grant to speak of his country as "this other Eden, demi-Paradise," to boast, with his dying breath, the renown of his countrymen, "formed by their blood and famous by their birth," renowned in the uttermost parts of the earth. Self-love has played an important part in the development of the United States. "We are the people" is a favorite expression, and, having uttered it, strenuous efforts are put forth to prove it correct.

Obviously, the excess of loyalty, is a defect in a nation, but it is not as vile a defect as sloth, indifference, self-contempt. The nations that have achieved most—France, England, Germany and the United States—have been largely controlled by self-love. In the days of her pride and self-love Spain held half the known world in the hollow of her hand. It was pride, self-love, that carried little Japan victoriously through her conflict with Russia, and it was the lack of self-love, contempt of self, that left her inside the Russian giant so weak and ineffective.

But there is another side to self-love. It may be vain pride mixed with gross self-delusion. In their blindness and conceit the so-called Christian powers of Europe have forgotten all about the brotherhood of man. They are squandering their substance on fleets and armies that foster their self-love. Each is striving to outdo the others in its boast to be the saviour of humanity as they profess, but its true pride of place and power. They say:

"Incident,
O'ercome with pride, ambitious past all thinking,
Self-flattering."

There is a self-love that makes for national greatness, but there is also a "pride that puts the country down." What is true of the nation is true of the individual. It is true in a choice between self-love and self-neglecting better for self-love. A concealed man in office or before the individual too frequently becomes a burden. Conceit in self is an excellent thing if it will but awaken the latent energy of the soul. A man of any force of character endeavors to live up to his professions. He takes pride in his "godlike reason, to infuse us like angels; we think of what we are capable of doing." It has been said that the Malay grows fairly proportional representation in the human family.

We quote from a Bangor paper on this point, which says: "The reports of the condition of the school of the state show that the Malay has been called a bright one for the infants. How needful it is to cultivate the body, to train it so that it can be the sound home of a sound mind. To neglect it is to sin against the infinite and against the race. Visit the factory districts of England or the slums of New York. What is what? Small, dwarfed, neglected bodies. The children are weakling. The sin of the self-neglect of the parents is stamped upon them.

On the mental side man is equally vulnerable. He has within him a voice urging him onward and upward. He has within him a desire to climb. Through sloth he may neglect to develop the faculties that raise him above the brute. He cannot rest by the wayside. If he is not by the advancing host he is in the rear-guard, covered with fears life's battle.

The ignorance and superstition which through the centuries have retarded the progress of the race have been due largely to self-neglecting. We speak of degeneracy. What is degeneracy but self-neglect? The parent has been careless, neglectful of body and mind, and the child is born a weakling thing. If man could but realize the Aristotelian golden mean between the excess and defect of self-love it were well. But, if they cannot, let them be taught to cultivate a proposed self-love than sinful self-neglect. The former may be salutary in its influence on character. It may be baneful in its effects. Self-neglecting denotes character. It prevents the development of character. It is, to a word, "vile" sin.

In the 483 Granges in the Pine Tree State There Are 56,000 Members One Grange Has a Membership of 1,000—Maine Favors Proportional Representation and Commends Its Master's Attitude in National Grange.

State Master Stetson opened the annual meeting of the Maine State Grange with a notably important address in which he emphasized the need of "the individual. It has to be a choice between self-love and self-neglecting better for self-love. A concealed man in office or before the individual too frequently becomes a burden. Conceit in self is an excellent thing if it will but awaken the latent energy of the soul. A man of any force of character endeavors to live up to his professions. THE KANSAS GRANGE.

Fire and Tornado Insurance an important Feature in Kansas.

In national grange affairs classes of grange activity are emphasized. In Kansas the Patrons of Husbandry insurance stands well to the front. On Dec. 1, 1909 the total risks carried amounted to $6,883,765. The average cost of insurance per $1,000 was $2.41, the highest for many years. Among the things the Kansas state grange would like to see accomplished are these: Establishment of the office of state fire marshal, the teaching of the elements of agricultural training and domestic science in all consolidated rural schools, placing all state wide public utilities, especially pipe lines and telephone and telegraph companies, under control of the national commissioners, the establishment of an experiment farm where seeds shall be grown and tested instead of issuing poor seeds to the people as the government now does and national aid for good roads.

This Farm Was Robbed Off.

The paid manufacturers of the state of Ohio had the polite low-down on the farmers of Ohio to force a tax upon the latter of patrons confiscating gains robbed out of the thirty hours of the last legislature. This farmer has a work to do to have a tax back at the coming session, says Mr. Stevens.

Honey Creek grange, Indiana, still has the sheaf of wheat which, it is said, Kelley, one of the founders of the Order, cut from a meadow both over forty years ago and which he used in starting the lessons of the Order at its organization.

Bought $10,000 Worth of Flour.

Since the organization of Pioneer grange of Michigan a little over two years ago the members have bought goods worth of flour and feed through the agency of their own society, besides patronizing some grange concerns liberally, says the Michigan Farmer.

Copper is Preferred.

Copper wires are preferred to steel in telephone holders by many farm phone experts.

Joy in Being Free from Debt.

Douglas Jerrold said, "He who dines out of debt, though his meal be but a biscuit and an onion, dines in the "Apollo," meaning a fancy London restaurant of the time. The same author exclaims: "What warmth is a threadbare coat if the tailor's receipt be in the pocket!"

Brought Home Prizes.

Three boys from Pioneer grange of Michigan a little over two years ago the members have bought goods worth of flour and feed through the agency of their own society, besides patronizing some grange concerns liberally, says the Michigan Farmer.

TRADE SAFE IF LEGAL, IS AS TAFT VIEWS IT

President in New York Speech Says Policy Toward Corporations Is "Live and Let Live."

SEES PERIL ONLY IN HYSTERIA

Executive in Vehement Talk Says He Will Safeguard Prosperity and Fulfill O. G. P. Pledges.

President Taft, speaking at the Lincoln day celebration of the New York Republican club, made defense in detail of the policies of his administration. He declared business "hysteria," due to agitation and fear of disaster, gotten up by the Democrats in general, to be unjustified, and throughout his talk pleaded for the abolition of factional differences among the future of the Republican party and the carrying out of its pledges.

"If the enforcement of the law is not consistent with the present method of carrying on business, then it does not speak well for the present methods of conducting business, and they must be changed to conform to the law," declared the President, and he indicated the immediate labors in the Waldorf-Astoria closed by the enthusiastic Lincoln banquet, who shared the honors of the evening with the President, joined in the sentiment.

Mr. Taft adhered to his purpose of discussing platform pledges and keeping his promises in full. It was at the conclusion of a detailed argument as to how the Republican party is redeeming its pledges that he came to a discussion of the sentiment in the Wall street, on which his utterances had been awaited with the greatest interest. The President declared that the administration would not "foolishly run amuck in business and destroy values and confidence just for the pleasure of doing so. Its policy was 'Live and let live.'"

"No one," he continued, "has a notion as strong as the administration has power to cultivate and strengthen business confidence and prosperity.

"But there was no possible on the part of the Republican party to change the sentiment he sought to strengthen. It. Of course the government at Washington can be counted on to enforce the law in the way best calculated to prevent a destruction of public confidence in business, but it must enforce the law."

The President declared there were signs which many construed to indicate that the Republican majority in Congress might be replaced by a Democratic majority. The cause he asserted in the disunion of the Republican party arising out of differences of opinion in regard to the tariff bill, and to the personnel of the leadership in the Senate.

He declared there existed a growing tendency to the assertion of individual opinion and purpose in the exercise of party discipline. The movement was toward individualism and small groups.

At this, Mr. Taft said, he was not against, in furtherance of the one great aim—party success. To this end, he asserted, a campaign of education was required.

"I am far from saying the Republican party is perfect," declared the President, and then he gave a warning that party insurgents should be pacified.

The high cost of living, Mr. Taft asserted, primarily was due to the "increase in the demand of value of gold and, in some measure, to combinations in restraint of trade."

IS BARRED FROM VATICAN

Charles W. Fairbanks Fails to Visit Pope After Delicate Intimation.

The visit to Rome of Charles W. Fairbanks, former Vice President of the United States, brought about a very delicate situation, owing to the fact that he wished to pay his respects to the King, the Pope and the American Methodist church. By a tactful arrangement Mr. Fairbanks' audience with King Victor Emmanuel was fixed for one day, and that with the Pope for two days later, and when everything seemed satisfactorily planned the Vatican suddenly announced that it would be impossible for His Holiness to receive the former Vice President if he carried out his announced intention to speak in the American Methodist church there, because its Methodists had been active in proselyting among the Catholics.

Negotiations were immediately begun with a view to avoiding any embarrassment, and a situation which might give rise to misconceptions, and it was understood that Ambassador Leishman officials exerted every influence to remove the difficulties which had so suddenly arisen, presented themselves to Mr. Fairbanks' audience with the Pope. Mr. Fairbanks then decided, it was stated, that, although he was assaulted by a strong desire to pay his respects to the head of the Catholic church, whose followers had played such an important part in our social American life, he could not withdraw from his promise to deliver an address before the American Methodist church.

Swedish Monarch Submits to Drastic Remedy for Appendicitis.

King Gustave of Sweden was operated on in Stockholm for appendicitis. The official report received said that the operation was a success. The King had been suffering from continual stomach pains. It was not for several hours that the physicians diagnosed these as one of appendicitis, requiring an immediate operation. The physicians first diagnosed the King's illness as cramp of the stomach, and the matter was taken with such little seriousness that several members of the royal family attended a concert. At 10 o'clock they were all summoned to return to the palace, where they were assembled at the appointed hour, tentatives to operate on his majesty.

SENTENCE CALLED TOO SEVERE

Found Guilty in Navy Case, but Penalty Is Light.

Action was taken by the Navy Department the other day on the recommendations of the court martial in the cases of Paymaster George P. Auld, U. S. N., and Passed Assistant Surgeon A. H. Robnett, U. S. N., and in both cases the department held the sentence of five months to be severe, although Paymaster Auld and Surgeon Robnett were sentenced only to loss of five numbers. Paymaster Auld's sentence was entirely remitted by the Navy Department and he is ordered restored to duty. Passed Assistant Surgeon Robnett had his sentence mitigated to loss of two numbers. It was made known today that the Navy Department found sufficient provocation for the assault on Dr. Cowles by Paymaster Auld on the night of the navy hop on Dec. 11.

SCARCITY CAUSE OF HIGH MEAT PRICES

Government Report Shows Live Stock Receipts of 1909 Smallest Since 1904.

GREATEST DECLINE IN HOGS

Last Year's Aggregate Meat Shipments from Chicago Is the Lowest in Five Years.

One contributing cause to the high price of meat, according to a report of the Department of Commerce and Labor, is the fact that live stock receipts for the year 1909 at seven leading interior markets of the United States were the lowest since 1904. The live stock receipts for the year 1909 in these markets aggregated 25,945,725 head. The receipts of hogs for the year fell off particularly, the total of the four years previous to 1909 the receipts had been in excess of 19,000,000 head, totaling more than 22,000,000 in 1908, falling to 18,834,611 last year.

Cattle receipts for 1909 in these markets, 3,119,217, while comparing favorably with those of the previous year, fell below the totals for the three years before 1908. Sheep fell below those in 1905 to 1907, but compared favorably with the 1908 totals. Of hogs at the Chicago market for 1909 show a decrease of 1,567,974, as compared with the year before, or a decline of 12 per cent, receipts at Kansas City decreased 17 per cent, receipts at Omaha 11 per cent, at St. Joseph 28 per cent, while the receipts at St. Louis were off 5 per cent.

While the total number of cattle received at these seven principal markets was larger than the year before, the 1909 cattle receipts at Chicago, 879,895 head, fell below the 3,000,000 mark for the first time since 1904.

The annual aggregate shipments of packing house products from Chicago, 2,651,205,713 pounds, were less than reported for any of the previous five years, and are more than 300,000,000 in the grand total with the exception of pickled beef and pork show large declines, as compared with the figures for the previous years.

The report also shows that grain receipts at fifteen of the principal markets during 1909, 749,424,684 bushels, were lower than for any year since 1904.

THEODORE, JR., TO WED.

Oldest Son of Former President Engaged to Miss Eleanor Alexander.

Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., oldest son of the former President of the United States, has won the hand of Miss Eleanor Hunter Alexander, daughter of Mrs. Henry Addison Alexander of 42 West Forty-seventh street, New York. Their betrothal was announced by the mother of the bride-to-be. The wedding, which is to be celebrated on an elaborate scale, will be deferred until the arrival in America of the bridegroom's father next June.

The announcement came as a surprise to even the close friends of the couple, for recently young Mr. Roosevelt has been attending a party in Europe and so he has had small opportunity for those social excursions in which he might meet the young lady.

"Teddy Junior," as his friends call him, is slightly more than 22 years of age. Since he was graduated from Harvard in 1908, taking the four years' course in three and graduating with high standing, he has been at work in the factories of the Hartford Carpet Company at Thompsonville, Conn., just outside Hartford. He has shown a thorough and diligent in his work and his tripe to New York have been for the purpose of work.

He said upon the spring being sent East it would take $25,000 to be distributed in the vicinity.

The heirs of William Burke, a wealthy resident of Wilcox, Minn., who died leaving a fortune of $1,000,000, are to be given a share of the immense terminal hotel for a new interurban railroad connecting the towns and villages of Southern Minnesota, which are now practically without railroad facilities.

An increase of 5 cents a hundred pounds on first-class freight from New York to Chicago by lake and rail has been agreed upon. All lines are said to have agreed to the increase except the Grand Trunk Railway. It is said that pressure is being brought to bear on this line to induce it to join in the measure.

JURY FINDS COLONEL SWOPE WAS POISONED

Coroner's Jurors Say Death Was Caused by Capsule Given by Hyde.

EXPRESS DOUBT OF INTENT.

Verdict Follows Testimony Given by Nurse of Deceased Kansas City Capitalist.

Colonel Thomas H. Swope came to his death by reason of strychnine administered by a capsule by Dr. H. C. Hyde, husband of the millionaire's niece, according to the verdict of the coroner's jury in Independence, Mo. Whether the drug was administered with felonious intent—or, if so, if it was unable to determine. The jury was out but a little more than an hour. The greater part of this time was devoted to discussing the case. But one ballot was necessary to agree upon a verdict.

With the testimony of Miss Pearl Keller, a nurse, of Dr. Ludwig Heilmann of Chicago, of Mrs. Leigh H. Swope and of Dr. Frank Hall in the inquest over the body of Colonel Swope in Independence, Mo., came developments in the mystery of the million-aire's death more startling than any facts heretofore produced.

Miss Keller's detailed story of the last moments of Colonel Swope's life, replete with features of happenings in the sick room of Mrs. Swope, of Dr. Hyde and Dr. Hall, and of the physicians of Kansas City, was the most damaging testimony yet given in the inquiry into the death of the millionaire.

The testimony of Miss Keller, the nurse, was followed by that of Dr. Hall, who testified that Colonel Swope's last words were "Poison! Poison!" Dr. Hyde asked her to use her influence with Mrs. Swope to have him appointed administrator of the Swope estate. Mr. Hanson had asked for the administrator.

On the morning of Colonel Swope's death, the nurse said, she gave him a three-grain capsule, supposed to contain digestive medicine. This she did at the direction of Dr. Hyde. Twenty minutes later Colonel Swope was in a convulsion. His death soon followed. Five minutes after Colonel Swope's death, according to the nurse, Dr. Hyde appeared, and with Attorney John G. Paxton secured Colonel Swope's will from his vest pocket.

Dr. Hektoen testified that one-sixth of a grain of strychnine was found in one-seventh part of Colonel Swope's liver. He believed there might be a grain in the entire organ. Half a grain would cause death.

FAMOUS SEA FIGHTER IS DEAD.

Brigadier General Robert Lenny Meade Succumbs to Illness.

Brigadier General Robert Lenny Meade of the United States Marine Corps, retired, died at the home in Washington of his daughter, Mrs. Lexington, the other day after an illness of several months. Meade was born in Washington, D. C., Dec. 26, 1841. The son of Commodore Richard W. Meade, United States Navy, a name of fighting stock. Educated at St. Mary's College, and at the United States Naval Academy, he entered the navy as a midshipman in 1856 and resigned in 1858. Reappointed in 1858, he served continuously until his retirement in 1906.

At the breaking out of the civil war he was assigned to blockade work and commanded a battalion when Norfolk was rescued from the Confederates. In 1863 he commanded a company in New York during the draft riots. In a night assault on Fort Sumter he was captured and was confined for fifteen months at Libby and Hightower prison. After his release he remained in the marine service and was one of the party from the Shenandoah who raised the flag over Lee's house. He was in the Spanish war, and was detached from the Brooklyn navy yard. For his services at Tientsin, China, he received a medal from Congress.

Former Champion Quietly Weds Sweetheart of His Boyhood.

John L. Sullivan, former heavyweight champion of the world, was married to his sweetheart of the Bowery House in Boston to Miss Kate Harkins of 265 Roxbury street by Father Lennon of the Immaculate Conception. Only a few intimate friends of the couple were present. For months it has been rumored that "The Big Fellow" was about to take the plunge for either wife, having gained a divorce from his first wife in Chicago last year. It is said by his friends that he has testified that he drove Fritch to Keorse Creek at midnight and waited for him to return. The two sacks which the doctor had brought from his house were empty. Into the water Prosecutor VanZile opened for the State. Miss Martha Henning, the dead girl's chum, was the first witness called.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of Chicago trade says:

"The usual tests of trade activity indicate that favorable conditions prevail. Commercial defaults still show largely in number, but the record includes none of special significance and is liabilities.

"The volume of actual payments through the banks compares favorably with that of a year ago, testifying to sustained recovery in the leading industries, but the aggregate of new demands for finished factory products is lower than recently noted and the markets for iron and steel are in a waiting attitude pending the action of heavy consumers. Future requirements are known to be unusually large and the present lull in commitments is regarded as temporary. Weather conditions have favored most branches of production and distribution and continuing to improvement is seen in the steadily rising freight tonnage and railroad earnings.

"Movement of hides, leather and lumber declines seasonable aggregates and the tendency for raw materials, general merchandise, furniture and automobiles are attributed by an enormous attendance of buyers.

"Bank clearings, $379,007,555, are 23.4 per cent over those of the corresponding week of five business days in 1909, and compare with $301,416,356 in 1908."

NEW YORK.

Trade still maintains the quiet unusual, but very well sustained, and not unusual, by the way, at this season of the year, when buyers are gathering at the leading markets in preparation for the opening of the spring campaign.

Reports of buyers being numerous and orders being conservative come largely from the leading northern and central western markets. Fears of a local strike in the bituminous regions have led to heavy buying by railroads and manufacturers.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending Feb. 10 were 249, as against 232 last week, 211 in the like week of of 1909, 326 in 1908, 291 in 1907 and 268 in 1906. Business failures in Canada for the week numbered 23, which compares with 30 last week and 29 for the same week last year.—Bradstreet's.

TOWN TO BE REPEOPLED.

Provement, Leelanau Co., About to Be "Resurrected."

Longfellow's poem "Evangeline" is really to be announced, that the iron of the French families of Provement are about to leave their Leelanau County home, where they have been living in Arcadian simplicity for several generations and seek a new location in far off Saskatchewan, Canada. The French, however, have not been driven from Provement, but with the enchantment of distance, the fields appear to be greener in the new country than they are in the old, hence the migration. Father Rousseau, in charge of the Provement Catholic Church and real head of the village, as soon as he learned of the intention of his parishioners immediately got in touch with people of his faith in Chicago, and as a result, when the fifteen families leave for Canada, twenty families will forsake Chicago and take the place of their compatriots in Leelanau. The location of the Bitters, the home of the family name of the greater number, will be known as Plamondville.

MILLMAN MURDER CASE OPENS.

Begin Trial of Doctor Held as Slayer of Wife Ida.

The trial of Dr. George A. Fritch, charged with manslaughter in connection with the death of Mabelle Millman, of Ann Arbor, was begun in Detroit the other day. The young woman dismembered body was found in three gunny sacks submerged in Ecorse Creek last September. The prosecution's strongest witness is expected to be Frank Fritch, the murderer who has testified that he drove Fritch to Ecorse Creek at midnight and waited for him to return. The two sacks which the doctor had brought from his house were empty. Into the water Prosecutor VanZile opened for the State. Miss Martha Henning, the dead girl's chum, was the first witness called.

TRIED BY VICIOUS BULL.

Three Farmers Held Prisoners for Hours in Frigid Weather.

Tired by a vicious bull, Albert Brown, a farmer near Caseville, and his two hired men spent several anxious hours and nearly perished in the frigid blasts from Wild Fowl Bay before they were rescued. The bull had escaped from the barnyard and the men undertook to cause him into the barnyard. Instead of complying the angry bovine made a dash for the men and they dashed for the nearest trees. They had just time enough to pull themselves into the protecting branches of a couple of maples out of reach of the bull's attacks. The bull adopted waiting tactics, according to know that his intended victims would be compelled to come off their perches or freeze to death. But a man with a collar came along the road and proved their salvation. They hailed him, informing him of their predicament. The man was compelled to drive three miles to obtain a rifle. Returning, he shot the bull and liberated the tired men, who were so stiff with the cold they could scarcely move.

STOVE BLOWN TO PIECES.

Rochester Couple Narrowly Escape Serious Injury.

Mr. and Mrs. Mark Axford of Rochester had a remarkable escape from serious injury when the kitchen range in their home was blown to pieces. The water in the pipes had frozen and when Mr. Axford started a fire in the morning an explosion followed, the stove being shattered as well as every window in the house. The force knocked the lack comb out of Mrs. Axford's hair, greater her head. Another piece slightly injured her husband on the hand. A month ago Mr. and Mrs. Axford escaped death in a threshing machine.

Dr. Kellogg recently announced that if the case the court decided against him he would close the institution and establish new ones in the East. Plans for two already have been practically completed. Both will be in New Jersey, one at Lakewood and the other at Atlantic City. In New Jersey such institutions are tax-free. The local fight to establish the status of the sanitarium as a charitable institution and exempt from taxation has been in progress for ten years.

WANT DEED SET ASIDE.

Old Man's Heirs Say Stepmother Got Farm by Unfair Means.

Seven years ago Mary Dolin took a job to cook for Daniel Miller's well known Carmel farmer. Six weeks later she had a wedding in the 200-acre farm, and they were married. Now the heirs have brought suit to have the deed set aside, on the ground that their stepmother took undue advantage of their father, who is over 70 years of age at the time of his marriage and was in poor health a year or more before their marriage. Mrs. Miller, who recently refused $10,000 for the farm.

ROBBED NEIGHBORS' HOMES.

Muskegon Young Man Makes Confession of Guilty.

Ray Fox, aged 19, a good family, was arrested in Muskegon, charged with the burglary of a number of homes of his neighbors. While bearing an exemplary reputation he is accused of entering the homes of friends and robbing them with skeleton keys and making way with about $100 in small amounts of money and jewelry. One of the thefts was of $15 stolen from a church collection box. The young man is said to have made a complete confession to the officers.

YEGGMEN ARE FOILED.

Try to Blow Postoffice Safe at Temperance.

Yeggs carry on a recent morning attempt to blow the postoffice safe at Temperance. Failure of the nitroglycerine to explode properly saved the contents of the safe. The men entered the place through the yeggs, however, procured $25 from Kinney's cash register. The robbers then broke open the Ann Arbor car house, stole a hand car and went to Toledo. Three suspects are under arrest.

MAKE ALCONA BUILD JAIL.

State Will Start Proceedings Against Delinquent Supervisors.

At the request of the State Board of Corrections and Charities Attorney General Bird will begin mandamus proceedings against the Board of Supervisors of Alcona County, which refused that county to erect a jail. It is said that this is the first time proceedings of this character have ever been commenced.

TO REALIZE 55 PER CENT.

Vernon Bank Creditors Given Life by Elder Sargent.

Receiver Cecil McLaughlin, of the defunct Sargent bank in Vernon, will file a statement with the County Clerk of the Vernon, owned and managed the bank, has contributed $4,000 to ward settling with the creditors, who will realize 55 per cent. The total value of the creditors are reported at willing to settle at this figure.

THE FATHER OF HIS COUNTRY.

"This government, the offspring of our own choice, unshamed and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and support."—From President Geo. Washington's address to the people of the United States, Sept. 17, 1796.

FEBRUARY TWENTY TWO.

All year we're talkin' of Dewey,
Of Teddy and the rest—
We're gloried in the knowledge
That they are of our best.
We've sung a song of triumph,
A song that's never done,
We've treated and we've toasted
The man behind the gun.

Our thoughts must now turn backward
To times long of the past—
To days of our forefathers
Must he in shadow cast.
For we must sing the song
(No other song can match it)
Of soldiers worse of the past—
The boy behind the hatchet.

HERO AND STATESMAN.

Washington Will Forever Be Place He Holds in History.

Our country has among its statesmen many noble and worthy men whose names and good deeds should not be forgotten and whose memories should live forever in the hearts of a grateful and liberty-loving people. Of all these, Washington stands preeminently at the head. Naturally, and very rightly, he holds the first place in our thoughts and in our patriotic affections. The anniversary of his birth has long been a legal holiday, and it not observed with the same demonstrations of enthusiasm that marked the celebration of the birthdays of our forefathers, it is because the people of this nation have so long been accustomed to honor Washington and our fathers fondly.

Washington was not carried the place he holds in history and in the hearts of his countrymen by the force of a thoughtful, deliberative nature. He was possessed of tremendous will power, of a dauntless courage as it was in his core runs the right channel, and he never faltered. Forward that work of self-training which he began in his early years and which he continued to the end, he knew, to the close of his long and eventful career. He was constantly in his habits, temperate, frugal, industry and sobriety, and these virtues, with the control of his passions and his powers, soon gave to him a judgment opposed by thoughtful observers, and a knowledge of mankind possessed by most men of twice his age and experience.

His innate modesty, too, is well known. In about the only letter he ever wrote he has been preserved he assures her that he did not seek the high place which the continental congress had given him as commander in chief of the American army. He also tells her that he was aware that he could not shirk the grave responsibility that was thrust upon him and that he could not, without bringing opprobrium and disgrace to his good name, decline the honor which was thrust upon him. He expresses his fears as to his ability to handle the great interests intrusted to him, but adds, with modest confidence, that he will do the best he can and leave the rest to that Providence who had all along guided and protected him in his eventful career.

Yet there, then, is enough for us to know that he did succeed in his new and responsible position, and in the discharge of his duties—commanded and at times displayed the heroism, fortitude and courage that won for him the undying love and veneration of every true American. Why should we, then, hesitate to accord the same blemishes, if there were any, of such a man?

We was not the only great general, the patient, uncomplaining patriot, sharing the sufferings and hardships of his fellow soldiers, and never, for one instant, swerving in his splendid devotion to his country and the great cause of human liberty. Washington was a man. He was now a patriot and a statesman. And let us rather be guilty, in his case, of a little hero worship than forget what he did for his country and humanity.

The Faith of Washington.

Washington was the authority of the nation turns to the man who was so large and heroic a figure in its first era and to whom its debt of gratitude will ever remain so large, it is both pleasant and helpful to remember that among the sterling qualities for which Washington is held in honor not the least is his strong and unswerving Christian faith.

Daughter of a Christian mother, Washington's religious deep and unobtrusive was the nature of his man, was from boyhood to death part of his daily life. It strengthened and sanctified him in every hour of trial and trouble heroic, sincere and unswerving in the time of depression, of complaint and of power.

As a young man but little over 20, when about him to join the ill-fated command of Braddock, he wrote to his mother, who, motherlike, feared for him to take the risk. "The God to whom you commended me, when I set out on a more per

Mr. Osborn's Plain Words.

We are glad Mr. Osborn speaks plainly concerning the need of a general house-cleaning. He is simply justified. There has never been a period in the history of Michigan when a general renovation of state affairs was more necessary than now, and we say it as one who will yield to no man in quality of statewide patriotism.

We do not believe that Governor Warner can truthfully be termed a grafter. We do not believe that he is personally a man who would wink at official wrong-doing. There are many regrettable conditions in Michigan that we do not think can be rightfully charged to his door. Nevertheless we believe that the state never had a weaker executive, and much that is to be condemned in Michigan's political party is due to executive weakness rather than to venality.

It has been said that he is a tool of the writer. The partial embracing Warner's two terms was not disagreeable to any executive ears that evinced enthusiasm or particularly merited praise. The only "live issue" that concentrated public interest was the "unmasked Warner battle of reform versus reform." Then, as the second term waxed and waned, Warner conferred the notion, or so pretended, that the future weal of the people of Michigan depended upon the adoption of "reforms" that he claimed as the fruit of his plain intellect.

Somehow he and Pat Kelly made the people believe in his pipe-dream, and for the first time in the history of the state a third term governor was elected, running loyally behind the electoral ticket and going to the straits of Mackinac defeated. How chase Osborn's section came down to the straits with its vote, and need the day is a matter of political history.

The editor of this paper counsel with no original thesis on bodies of low dimensions, nor yet concerning dense ideas of the fourth dimension. Neither does he claim to be a political savant, or prophet, but, in the face of this paper's showing, he cannot but regard Governor Warner to the primaries for a third nomination. He could discover no emergency that warranted such radical departure from established precedent. It pointed out the political danger that was wrapped up in the proposition. But the seed was sown, and the harvest is now ripe. Conditions are assuming and Chase S. Osborn has the courage to proclaim the fact. He is high time for plain words to be spoken.

A careful review of the situation cannot fail to convince the most earnest of every day observers that Mr. Osborn is the one man who can lead the party to certain victory, and those who know the man know that the "house cleaning" will be of the thorough sort.

Peculiar Erysipelas Cure.

At Loch Carron, Scotland a certain cure for erysipelas is said to be half of the ear of a pig cut and let the blood from either both drop on the inflamed parts.

Wasn't Need a Crutch.

When Elliot J. P. Sussman, of Corpelius, N. C., limited his leg badly, it started an ugly sore. Many salves and ointments proved worthless. Then Bucklen's Arnica Salve healed it thoroughly. Nothing is so good for cuts, bruises, burns, boils, bolds, felons, fever sores, eczema, piles. 25c at F. G. Bluse & Co.

Northern Michigan

The board of trade at Traverse City has appropriated $1,500 for publicity purposes in making the town known as a summer resort.

Frank Sweet, of Manistique, has mysteriously disappeared. He was last seen in Manistique last week Friday night at a fire. Mrs. Sweet says she knows no reason for his strange actions.

At the special election held on Monday in Harbor Springs to decide the question of bonding that town for $45,000 for a municipal water system there were 47 votes for and 180 votes against the proposition.

Traverse City Record-Eagle: The bay is frozen over at last and those who bet the frozen peg that the ice would not form over old Grand Traverse should get busy and pay up. There is nothing doing in the line of open water.

Boyne Citizen: Sheriff McWain reached here yesterday with Nelson Knapp Jr., who was immediately arraigned before Judge Hammond. He waived examination and was bound over to circuit court for trial. He was taken to Charlevoix jail in default of bail.

Boyne Journal: Knowles, Converse & Co. are negotiating with representatives of eastern parties who are looking for 10,000 acres of fruit land. It is a large corporation and if they should so landed in this locality it would give an impetus to the fruit raising which would be of great value to the country.

East Jordan Herald: County Agent Hudson was at Coldwater this week where he took three children and placed in the state institution. The one is a cripple. The family resided in Hudson township, the father deserted the family and the mother was compelled by circumstances to enter the county infirmary.

A fire of unknown origin was discovered in the elevator room of hall 11 at the Northern Michigan asylum at Traverse City Sunday morning. Although the blaze spread so quickly that the room was all on fire before efforts could be made to subdue it, the asylum fire brigade extinguished it without calling the city department. The contents of the room were entirely destroyed, but outside of that, the greatest damage was done by water.

Cadillac News: The majority through which the saloons were banished from Wexford county two years ago was 356. The great change in sentiment in this city and throughout the county which has taken place results in local option alone the first of May, 1909, makes it quite certain that the majority for local option at the local election will be not less than twice that of two years ago, and it is quite probable that it will be nearer 1,000.

Boyne Journal: Deputy State Ward E. L. Stanford returned from a trip to Detroit one night last week and while he rounded up a few violators of game laws Thanksgiving Bros., a meat market firm of Petoskey, were convicted of selling illegal sized trout and upon conviction paid a fine of ten dollars and costs. Chas. Hunter, of the same place, paid the same amount for marketing undersized trout and E. H. Hill defendant, of Harbor Springs, had been shipping and selling perch that were not of the size required by law and he also had to dig up a ten dollar bill along with the necessary costs.

Elk Rapids special: Thomas Jefferson Davis, one of the oldest pioneers of the Grand Traverse region, dropped dead of heart disease at his home at his place on Sunday afternoon. He had eaten a hearty dinner and was playing with some of his grandchildren when he was stricken. He came to Old Mission in 1846 with his father, who was government postmaster and farmer for the Indians. He moved to Elk Rapids in 1849, where he has made his home ever since. In his younger days he owned and sailed a boat between Traverse City and the lower lakes. He was a veteran of the civil war in which he made a long and honorable record.

Two hundred persons assembled one evening last week at the Lyon armory to see a wrestling match between Jack Russell of Indianapolis and Frank Burns of Boyne City. Burns had been in favorite during the day and there was a great demonstration when he won the final, making two of three falls. Burns has been in Saginaw and nearly a hundred from that city were here for that bout. Russell was fifteen pounds the heavier. They put up a fine exhibition and at first it looked like Russell, who put Burns down in sixteen minutes in the first bout thirty then took the second fall in twelve minutes and the third in seventeen minutes. Burns challenged all comers and Russell wanted another chance with no division of money.

Not Likely to Become General.

Of course it can be the daughter of an American millionaire who appeared at Longchamps' famous velodrome riding the wheel, a pair of heavy, fur-lined shoes. We should all be terribly disappointed if any other girl had thought of such a thing first. But the idea is not likely to be widely imitated, even among the ultra rich, which is also a comfort.

CENSUS QUESTIONS

Are You Prepared to Answer the Questions that Will Be Asked.

Everybody knows that the census enumerator will ask how old you are and many are not particular about answering that question, some will hedge, some will be untruthful, some will let the enumerator figure it out. In addition to this sometimes uncomfortable question, we take from the Chicago Tribune the following, which it would be well to fix each head of the home" to look over and be prepared to answer, as it will expedite matters when the census taker calls in April:

What is your house number?
What is your name?
The names of the members of your family?
What is the relationship of these people to you?
How old are you?
Are you single, married, widowed, or divorced?
How long have you been married, if at all?
How many children have you?
Where were you born?
Where was your father born?
Your mother?
How long have you been in this country?
Are you naturalized?
Can you speak English? If not, what can you speak?
What is your occupation?
Are you employed or an employer?
Were you out of work April 15, 1910?
How long out of work in 1909?
Can you read and write?
Do you own or rent your home? Any mortgage.
Are you a survivor of the union or confederate navy or army?
Are you blind? One or both eyes? And—lastly—
Are you deaf or dumb?

County Normal Notes.

The normal class was invited over to the training room to a Valentine party Monday afternoon, Feb. 14.

June Stafford substituted in Miss Mansen's room Monday and Tuesday, Feb. 14 and 15.

The normal class made a trip out to the country to visit some of the schools Friday, Feb. 18. These schools were visited: The ones taught by Miss Pearl Hurst, Miss Madge Howe, and Miss Lulu Crites.

The class organized first and second basket ball teams last week. Those in the first team are as follows: Louise Christensen, Georgia Scroggie, Bertha McCalmon, Isabel Knight, Blanche Newland and Emma Rasmussen. A game was played between the normal and high school teams Saturday evening, Feb. 19, and the game ended in favor of the high school, the score being 14 to 11.

Winnie Maddough's division of the normal training school gave the following program Monday afternoon, Feb. 21:

Song, Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean—Class.
Recitation Margaret Watson.
Essay, Beneficial Insects—Mary Hastings.
Violin solo—Bertha McColmon.
Essay, Best Types of Beef and Dairy Cattle—Isabel Knight.
Essay, Flowers for the Brave—Bessie Martindale, Blanche Newland.
Recitation, Smack in School—Georgia Hedford.
Critic's report—Miss Reed.
Song, Mount Vernon Bells—Class.

After the program, wafers and tea were served to the visitors including the high school basket ball team of girls, who were invited to attend the program.

Cure for Snake Bites.

In Devonshire, England, any person bitten by a viper is advised to kill the creature at once and rub the wound with its fat. This practice has, to some extent, survived in this country, where the flesh of the rattlesnake is accounted to be the best cure for its own bite, but as a rule the leading superstition in the United States is of the efficacy of numerous potions of whisky as an antidote for snake bite.

Principle Long Known.

Two centuries ago the principle of the tactical was known. An advertisement in the London Daily Courant of January 13, 1711, announces that at the sign of the Seven Stars, under the piazzas of Covent garden, a church was on view that would travel without stirring and measure the miles as it goes." It was capable of turning and reversing, and "could go uphill as easily as on level ground."

Takes a Dive in His Sleep.

A Liverpool man who had read Rider Haggard's "Allan Quatermain" just before going to bed the other night, had such a vivid dream that he was diving from a rock—an incident that figures in the story—that he took a header from the bed to the floor, a deed that nearly resulted in his death from concussion of the brain.

Hazards of Life.

A. T. T. Tectonfer, who had seven tubes or seven smallest drop in his life, slipped upon a banana skin, cracked his skull and died. Thus fate overtakes us and jests at wisdom. Some of the most prudent have shunned strong waters all their days only to quit from a careless, sloppy fingering of the deadly gas cock of from a wee little bit too much of gilets or fish roe.—New York Press.

Pineapples.

People in the north don't know what pineapples are, because to be shipped to this market they must be picked when they are green and an unripe pineapple is just wood, to be handled with a knife, a hatchet or a saw. Taken off the tree when it is ready, the inside fruit is flowing honey, to be dipped out and eaten, as the sailors of pineapple countries do, with a spoon.—New York Press.

A Great Lecture, By a Brilliant Man Friday Night.

Maurice Penfield Fikes, D. D., who was unable to fill his date in the local lecture course, and for whom Hon. Carl D. Thompson was substituted, has been secured as an extra number in said course, and will give his popular and inspiring lecture "Twentieth Century Opportunities," at the baptist church next Friday evening at 8 p. m. Dr. Fikes is indeed a brilliant orator, and a rare treat is assured our citizens in the privilege of hearing him, as he is evidenced by clippings from some of our large city papers, where he has lectured.

"Twentieth Century Opportunities" was one of the most eloquent and powerful lectures ever heard in this city." (Bridgeton, N. J.) "The inspired eloquence of Dr. Fikes works wonders. He knows men and how to arouse their manhood." (Wheeling, W. Va.) "He is one of the finest orators on the American platform." (Mattituck, L. I.) "Never have I heard so many citizens speak so highly of any speaker, and we have had among us the best in the country." (Johnstown, Pa.)

Rev. Ehle, the chairman of the lecture course committee, having heard Dr. Fikes three different times, says to one and all "hear him and you will never regret it." Holders of regular season tickets will be asked to pay the small additional admission of 20 cents each, which also reserves their same season seat for that evening.

The general admission for the evening will be 35c. Tickets for the balance of course (four numbers) 75c.

On sale at Fletcher's. No extra charge for reserve seats.

Pomona Grange Meeting.

About one hundred members representing seven subordinate granges met in Pomona session with Wilson grange Thursday, Feb. 17th. After enjoying a most bountiful spread, in which there was no apparent sympathy manifested for the "boycotting" of any article of diet, the meeting was called to order in the fifth degree by the Worthy Master. The roll call disclosed the fact that with but two exceptions, each officer was present.

The usual order of business was then taken up, the work being relieved from time to time, by selections from the program previously prepared under the supervision of the worthy lecturer. The state speaker being unaccountably absent, volunteer remarks were called for, and several members responded in an interesting manner. Worthy Master withdrew as member of committee to draft Constitution, and Hy. Laws and Bro. J. A. Newville was appointed in his stead.

This committee is expected to report at next meeting. The discussion on the topic "Why farm accounts should be kept" led by Bro. H. L. Olney, evoked considerable interest, and several members agreed to keep a strict book account during the coming season, of at least a portion of their crops, and to submit a report of same at its close.

The evening session was largely taken up with reports of committees. Of the twelve granges reporting, Deer Lake grange was declared the banner grange of the county for the quarter ending Jan. 1. Ironton grange was a close second having made the largest increase of membership during the quarter.

Auditing Committee reported audit had $91 57. Two applications for fifth degree were accepted and candidates were obligated. After enjoying a very interesting program of recitations, songs, etc., grange closed in form to meet with Deer Lake grange Thursday, April 21.

—"Wealth in Michigan Farms," is the title of a very attractive folder issued by the Pere Marquette advertising the special home seekers' excursions to Michigan. The booklet is well illustrated, all the pictures coming from the Grand Traverse region. The rates on these excursions are very low, the starting points being Chicago, Toledo, Michigan City, Ind., and Benton Harbor. The following are the dates of the excursions: March 15 and 29; April 5 and 19; May 3 and 17; June 7 and 21; July 5 and 19; August 2 and 16; September 6 and 20; October 4 and 18; November 1 and 15. December 6 and 20. The matter of the book is well written, there being no wild eyed dreams of wealth without effort, the description being conservative and showing that in order to succeed even in Michigan, common sense and energy must be used.

Mr. Merritt has published an illustrated bulletin upon the subject and will gladly mail this free to persons so requesting.

—A letter from Detroit conveys the sad intelligence of the death of Mrs. Hylena Sec in that city the 20th. The older residents of Charlevoix will learn of Mrs. See's death with profound sorrow. For many years Mr. See was engaged in the mercantile business here. The building now occupied by the State Savings Bank was built by Mr. See, as was also the See house on State street, later known as the Burtholomew residence. Mrs See was beloved by a large circle of friends in Charlevoix, and for the bereaved husband, who was so faithful to his stricken companion for so many years, there is a general expression of profound sympathy. Mrs. See has been blind and in frail health for many years.

—Famous Compton Hoote, of Grand Rapids, a reader of exceptional ability, a graduate of Edna Chaffee Noble's school, of Detroit, will dramatize and impersonate, wholly from memory, Charles Harris Kennedy's work, "The Servant in the House," as the next number of the lecture course, at the Baptist church next Friday night, March 4th. Of this reader's talent and ability Mrs Noble says: "She has a simple, direct and forceful way of expressing herself; recites with ease and has remarkable self-control; has a commanding and gracious presence, and is thoroughly in earnest." Better hear her Friday night. Admission, 35 cents. Tickets on sale at Fletcher's drug store.

—Miners with a full equipment of dredges, hydraulic giants and other appliances are making preparations to work over the placer ground in the Pierce City district in northern Idaho, where according to J. H. Greer, an operator who has come to Spokane from that camp, more than $100,000 in gold was cleaned up by one boat, two hydraulic giants and several smaller operations during the season of 1909. Greer said it is estimated that the output of yellow metal will be doubled if not trebled the coming season, beginning early in May. Charlevoix people will be interested in the power of water, inasmuch as J. W. Harris, formerly of this city, had charge of a plant there for two years. Capt. Louis Gosal, E. M. Gosal and Capt. J. P. Partridge are all there, and all after the yellow stuff.

—The general regret that is felt in Marion for the removal of Jerry Barry and his family for the far west found expression last Friday night, when the people of that section of the township, and some from other neighborhoods, pounced down upon the Barry home loaded with baskets and pulled filled with about everything that a country home city could devise. It was a farewell surprise for neighbors who have been deservedly very popular. Although there could not help but be a tinge of sadness attached to the event, the evening was spent joyously by all present. The ladies presented Mrs. Barry with a patch work quilt with a name stitched into every patch, and there were good many potatoes. The man brought Jerry a beautiful clock. Marion is not alone in regretting the departure of the Barry family. They have very many friends in Charlevoix who hope to see them back here again some day.

THE SHIPPING OF EARLY DAYS

The New Order of Things and the Old —"First the Acorn and Then the Oak"—Our Maritime Development.

A proper realization of the present importance of Charlevoix harbor and its inland waters can only be reached by a comparison with the beginning. In the SENTINELS day the waters of Pine River battled with the surf with a three foot depth over a gravel bottom, along the length of which, in the riffles, speckled trout readily took the fly, and through which the small fishing boats could only traverse by a line leading to the shore.

It was over this bar, in 1868-9, that the tugs Commodore Nutt and Minnie Warren crossed by the aid of a stump puller. Then came Henry Morgan's long-handled scraper, following a state appropriation of sixteen sections of swamp land, "for reclamation and drainage." Parts of the old slab breakwater are yet visible on the shore line, and up to a few years ago the timber piles of the old outside wood dock were visible from the bluff. It was at this dock that the lumers "wooded," a swarm of the old clippers,—the Idaho, Fountain City, Oneida, Mohawk, Badger State, Empire State, St. Louis, Iman Richmond, Boscobel, Annie L. Craig, and others.

The old timer yet remembers the fleet of little vessels that took out cargoes of shipping wood,—the scow Maple Leaf, Capt. "Hans" Edwards, the scows Hercules and Mendota, and the schooner Little Georgie—as from a little craft as ever sailed fresh water. Then one day, between gales, following one of Henry Morgan's efforts with the scraper, Capt. James Gibson, with the Fountain City, bound up tight, brought his boat into Round Lake. There was a bonfire that lay from the pioneers that nearly cracked the firmament. The jolly old roster, skipper was pretty well soured before he reached Lake Michigan, and never tried the experiment again.

Capt. The Smith's schooner Sea Gem marked the beginning of the new dispensation, when the first government appropriation dredge and partially protected and channel. The old timer cannot fail to remember the "boss" of settlers when the upper channel was cut through and use tugs dragged over the wooded Pine Lake waters. Then came Capt. "Jiming" Mees from Muskegon with the Annie, the first passenger boat to navigate the inland waters.

But the period of transition from the old to the new life had begun, the opportunity for settlers passed the value of the forest product and drove the lumers from the wood dock to the sawdrafts. One by one the "big" Lake Michigan boats dropped out, and the old dock began to crumble and sun bleach to the waver and ice, to become just a memory.

And now, as the old timer stands by the bridge where the big ore-laden steamers pass up and the million-foot lumber barges pass out he harks back to the days when he, perhaps, stood merrily on the same spot and squared suckers,—when the cotton lined line dangled from his hat while drinking the cold, sparkling water from a protecting log. Then when he turned, he saw Wauton rounds up to her dock he thinks back to the days when the Lawrence and Champlain were the pride of the port. And while he dreams of his earlier days the Missouri and Illinois majestically enter the harbor, and he is reminded that even now plans are out for another boat of that line that surpass in size and beauty the famous Northland and Northwest.

Is it any wonder, then, that the old timer who has seen all this growth looks back with wonder at what he years have wrought, and with greater wonder at what future years may bring to him and posterity.

CULTIVATE NEWSPAPERS

Elder Urges Pastors to Let Press Know What They Do.

Rev. Sam R. Hay, presiding elder of the Fort Worth district of the Methodist Episcopal church, believes in publicity for churches. He even believes that a minister can, without detriment to himself, associate with mere reporters, and that he should do so in the interest of his church, says a Fort Worth, Tex., correspondent.

At a recent meeting of the Methodist Pastors' association he took the preachers to task for not giving the newspapers information about their church affairs.

"The newspapers are willing and glad to print anything you will give them," he said. "Way, I always have a couple of reporter friends on my staff. I hobnob with them and buy them a glass of soda water occasionally, and when I have anything of interest they are ready to publish it in their papers. Get friendly with the reporters. They are not such bad fellows—some of them—and you will get your church notices in and you will have larger congregations.

"Yes sir; cultivate the reporter—he will help you, and you might be able to help him."

Now, we wonder if Rev. Dr. Taylor will "tumble?" The SENTINEL scribe is not fond of soda water, but he is very partial to ice cream.

The Eagle and Judge Willis Brown

The Traverse City Eagle of the 25th prints a leading editorial discrediting Judge Willis Brown, of Bay City, and quotes certain individual attacks, all originating in Salt Lake City, where Brown was for two years the judge of the juvenile court. The charges are:

1st. That one of his decisions as judge of that court was reversed by a higher court.

2nd. That the court was abolished and another court established, presumably with either broadened or lessened power, and that Brown failed in his efforts to be appointed judge of the new court.

3d. That he is not truthful, in that he represented himself in the east as judge of the Salt Lake juvenile court when in fact he was only acting as judge of the Salt Lake juvenile court

CHAPTER X.

Great was the dismay throughout the country side when it became known that Maurice Aylmer had been murdered. There was hardly a person of consequence in the county who could not claim at least a bowing acquaintance with him. Moreover, Maurice was one of those men who are always popular, and such popularity was manifested for his untimely death. Into the mystery of it which he had come in his end, the absence of any known enemy, and the belief that the deceased had no enemies—all these things combined to raise public curiosity to the highest pitch.

Crowding the papers on the one all parts of the country to view the scene of the crime and to obtain if possible a glimpse of Jim David, who as relatives of the deceased were now the idols of the hour, but thanks to the presence of the police and the vigilance of Jaggard, the unofficial crowd of sightseers were unable to satisfy their curiosity. The two men remained in seclusion, and save for an occasional glimpse of Jim David, who, considering the way he was behaving, made Maurice, the Major regarded as a stubborn fellow.

"Can't play let the poor man rest in his grave?" said one, "but there he is, all through her opposition, to the church that he helped to build."

"Oh, you can't say that, Uncle Jem," remonstrated a boy.

"Yes, I can, Sir. If Maurice had not been interrupted from being married quietly, there would have been no necessity for him to call on Ernald, and if he had not done that, he would not have been on the highroad in the night to meet with his death. Mr. Dallas and her infernal engines are at the bottom of this whole business, I reckon."

Of course this was mere raving on the part of Uncle Jem, the poor man was beside himself with grief at the loss of Maurice, and hardly knew what he was saying. Being in this frame of mind, he was by no means pleased when shortly after the delivery of Mrs. Dallas' message, he was approached with a request for a personal interview.

"I shouldn't wot that blackguard, Ernald, I shouldn't, if I were you, Major," said Ernald jubilantly, "she might be the bearer of valuable information in the manner of the detection of Aylmer's assassin."

David had the room and remained absent for some time. On his return he seated himself beside Jim and with a message from Isabella, said that she proposed to decline to accept the Major. Seeing that the negress was there was no need to wonder at what Miss Dallas might want with him at an interview, Jim yielded, and Hode was admitted into the library. She looked paler, more anxious, and more sullen than ever, and David was considerably at a loss to know Dr. Ernald—who, by the way, kept his dark eyes stubbornly fixed on her—was fairly composed when she addressed the Major.

"My lil mister want you, sir," said Hode, giving straight at the point. "Miss Dallas, she sick. She make terrible bothery, dat poor girl. Massa come aw ter, my lil mister, dat she say."

"I can't at present! The police are in the house, there is work for me to do," interrupted the Major, who was evidently in a fretful mood. "Tell your mistress, Dido, that I'll see her to-morrow."

"She wants you to-day!" insisted Dido, obstinately.

"I have given you the message," said Jim, sharply, "and she will see her to-morrow. And now, Dido, I want to know what's to do with this pretty strike?"

"I, massa! De Dido she do nothin. Massa Maurice he die Voodoo! Oh, yes!"

"By that devil-stick poison?"

"Me don' know what devilum-stick is! I no touch him!"

"It is very strange! Impossible to learn anything from so obstinate a creature, so Jim repeated that he would call up on Isabella on the morrow, and dismissed the negress. As she left the room Dr. Ernald followed her, and on his return mentioned casually that he had been giving Dido some instructions as to what was to be done with Isabella.

"The girl is nervously excited," he explained, "and I fear that she has established this shock of Mr. Aylmer's death (here he knowing what complications may ensue."

"Jim was a prophet of evil, Ernald! First, my poor Maurice, now Miss Dallas!"

"As to that," replied Ernald, with deliberation, "I foretold that Miss Dallas may get ill from perfectly natural cause. She was in love with my poor, she is of a highly excitable and nervous character, so it is only to know that unless great care is exercised, her health may be affected."

"But with regard to Maurice?"

"Quite a different thing. I read in his hand that he would be subject to a state of lethe in Death."

"Which, as we guessed, meant paralysis or catalepsy," said David. "But, as you say, poor Aylmer is dead. Your prophecy was false."

"Which, as we guessed, Mr. Aylmer is dead, as you say, so the true life in his frame cannot be applied. He was present state of non-existence. But you will admit that I foretold that evil would happen to him if he decided to marry Miss Dallas. It has been fulfilled, as I thought."

"True, doctor," remarked Jim, keeping his eyes fixed upon the heart face of the other. "And as I said at the time, so say I."

"Ah!" What sign do you expect me to say? demanded Ernald, coldly.

"Say what you liked about Maurice? Who stole the devil-stick?"

"I can't answer," said the doctor, taking up his hat. "A detective may be able to assist you on these points. Escape ourselves!"

"No," said Jim, taking David by the arm. "We don't need aid from the law to learn who killed Maurice, and avenge his death. David and myself will find the guilty person."

"Really," I hope you will succeed. But a case like this requires a trained intelligence such as you may find in a detective. Of course, you have my sincere and my services, Major, but I'm afraid you will not succeed."

When the doctor had taken himself off, and was walking past the library windows towards the curve of the avenue where it ran into the main, Jim looked after him with a lowering face, and laid an inquiring finger on David's arm.

"Do you trust that man, my boy?" he asked, gruffly.

"No!" returned Surby, after a pause. "I think he is a bad lot."

"I am sure of it; and what's more, I believe he knows who killed Maurice, if he does not, he knows who killed her!"

"Jim, I'm afraid you are epileptic!"

"Do you know what devil-stick is?"

"I too think!"

"Maurice is one here, Dido. Miss Dallas; let me take you back to your mother!"

"My mother is so scared," said Isabella, in a low tone. "and I feel so ill!" she continued, raising her hand to her forehead. "I wish I could see Jim David, but Maurice—my dear Maurice—"

"I shall tell you all about it in—one moment," interrupted Jim, mollified, and led her out of the room. "At the present moment you must go home with Mr. Surby. David, there is a long chat with you in the hall. Wait for me in the library. It is best that she should leave it in ignorance."

David did as he was told, and sauntered up his cousin after he had plunge into hostility, in the library they waited for the Major respecting the story of the window, which he had heard in the girls entry. When he finish these idiots, a great of mind blow out of Jaggard's face. He was amazed at the sight. There was something in the rigidity of the body, the form, steel-hot out as stiffly under the sheet, the face, calm, peaceful, as if in sleeping, and jagged was watching the room. He was in sight throughout the night.

David retired early to bed, as he was quite worn out with the anxieties of the day; but Jim was too grieved to sleep. He remained in the library thinking over his great loss, and wondering what would come next, and that young life. Towards 12 o'clock he went to the kitchen, and had a short conversation with the policeman, who was the only inquiry visitor with more brains than a pumpkin. Afterwards he went to the chamber of death to see that Jaggard was not sleeping at his post. Finally, like the old soldier he was, Jim went round the house, to satisfy himself that the windows and doors were bolted and barred. All these things done, he retired to the library.

At first he read and then paced up and down, thinking of his dead son and finally as the hands of the clock drew to midnight, he threw himself on a chair, and worn out in body and mind, slept the old man sleep profoundly. Hour after hour passed in silence; the lamp burned and the night came down as the mind come and moaned through the house round the house, but the muttering of the breeze and the tickling of the clock, and the sound was to the heart in that silent room wherein Jim slept heavily.

Suddenly he woke with a start. Someone was rapping lightly on the shutters of the window. Thinking at the clock, Jim saw that it was 2 in the morning, and wondered who could be outside at so hollow a hour, as was to be the hollow. With care, bagatten of old experience, he picked up his revolver, and held it ready while unbolting the window shutters. When he was ready he open, he saw a white figure with outstretched hands rapping at the window.

"Miss Dallas! You here? At this hour?"

"Yes, yes," whispered the girl, sweeping into the room. "I got out of my bedroom window and creeped from my mother and Hode. I was in mortal fear. Take me to the death-chamber."

Seeing from her looks that she was too distraught to be argued with, Jim led her out of the library and into the dead man's room. Then he uttered a cry, which was heard as the shriek from the grief.

The bird was empty—the corpse was gone.

COFFEE MADE IN CAN

Elaborate Tremolite Could Not Compete With Lead Lard Holder.

Who ever send into any restaurant but he has heard the angry remark, "Take back that lead water. If he be anywhere about, "This is the worst egg I ever tasted!" No matter how expensive the brand or how careful its transformation into fragrant stimulant, it is sure to displease some one and call forth heated argument as to what coffee should be and how best to make a decent cup of it. I happened into such a party a week or so ago, says a writer in the Philadelphia Inquirer, and when the argument was at its highest point some one of the four declared that he could make a good cup of coffee as easily as not if he would try. Then a boisterous and two nights later the four men who had started the row came, one of them had an expensive copper contrivance of French design that looked like a distilling apparatus; another an equally elaborate German coffee pot; the third was patriotic, relying to one of American invention, while the fourth raised a peal of laughter when he displayed an ordinary gallon tin can, whose label indicated that it had once held lard in it.

"You may laugh if you like," said the man with this primitive holding can, "but I can make better coffee with this can than any 10 you fellows with your fancy things." After another laugh of derision from the three others of the "fancy things" the alcohol lamps were lighted; noon the room was filled with the fragrance of the stimulating bean, and within half an hour or so the four separate products were submitted to an unbiased committee of three.

The decision was unanimously in favor of the coffee made in the tin can, and even the other contestants did not appeal from the committee's judgment. As a proof that good coffee can be made in this way the recipe is given here, so that all doubters may try it.

Punch a few holes in the cover of the can, so as to avoid explosion from steam pressure.

Pour into the can as many cups of cold water as is likely to be required, using the cups to be drunk from, and then add half a cup to allow for evaporation.

Put into the cold water one heaping tablespoonful of good ground coffee for each cup required, half a tablespoonful additional for good measure and one heaping teaspoonful of chicory, if you like chicory, and stir the grounds into the cold water until they are thoroughly soaked.

Cover the can, put it over the fire, and when the water has come to a hard boil leave it there for fifteen seconds, then lip it aside until the boiling has ceased.

Repeat this operation three times; that is to say, move the can from the fire until it has boiled and simmered down four times; pour into it one ounce of cold water; let it stand for five minutes until the grounds have settled to the bottom, and then serve. I am assured that this recipe never fails to produce coffee that will satisfy any palate.

PRESIDENT TAFT'S SPEECH IN NEW YORK.

SALIENT SUGGESTIONS IN TAFT'S SPEECH.

Trusts—If the law is not consistent with present business methods, business methods must be made consistent with the law.

Tariff—The Payne-Aldrich bill is a downward revision on necessities and the best tariff revenue law enacted in this country.

Postal Savings Banks—Such banks can be constitutionally established. If the Republican party does not accomplish this, it must face charges of bad faith.

Federal Incorporation—Save interstate business from State harassment and protect public through publicity and supervision.

Railroads—Prevent watering of securities and empower a commission to regulate rates for transport of public.

Injunctions—Require that no federal court injunction shall issue without full notice and hearing unless to prevent irreparable injury and in such case to extend only five days before hearing.

Conservation—Reclassification of public lands according to their greatest utility and vest in the executive power to dispose of coal, phosphate, oil and mineral lands and water power sites to prevent their monopoly by syndicates.

Little hope for liberal combinations and law-breaking trusts is held out by President Taft, who in his speech delivered in the Brooklyn Borough Chamber of Commerce last night, said that the enforcement of the law is not consistent with present methods of business, and that the business methods must be changed to conform with the law.

Over 2,000 Republicans were present at the banquet at which President Taft was the first speaker, beginning his address at the close of the dinner. He spoke for an hour and a half, and followed with the following tribute to President Roosevelt:

Will Defeat Lawe.

"I regard such a commitment as that to defeat the law, full lessons it takes, and I am sure that the Republican party will suffer if any such thing should happen. If the law provided that the time for the enforcement of the law should meet the financial exigencies of the government, I should be in favor of such a provision. Unfortunately, the law provides for a certain number of days before the time for the payment of duties, and accordingly, as Congress adjourns on Saturday, the political strategy of the opposition to the bill will be to delay the passage of the bill beyond the fatal date, so that the national treasury will be in a state of bankruptcy, and the Republican party will be compelled to resort to the issuance of certificates of indebtedness to increase the revenues by increasing the tax on tobacco, and by the issuance of bonds for other or other articles.

"I am sure that the leaders of the Republican party will not allow the Democratic party to put them in such a position. Nothing would be especially good in the platforms that this party has adopted in its conventions. The platforms that it wrote in the years 1908 and 1910 were platforms that were adopted by the Republican party. The Republican party spoke defined it by the platforms that it adopted, and I am convinced by shutting off foreign competition, and by the enactment of a law which will prevent the formation of trusts that tariff unnecessary, the Republican party will be able to redeem its promises, 229 increases and 1,150 items of decrease, and I am convinced that the Republican party will be able to redeem its promises, and I believe because we have put in the Republican platform of 1908 and 1910 a reasonable tariff, and because we have put in the platform of 1908 and 1910 a reasonable tariff, and because we have put in the platform of 1908 and 1910 a reasonable tariff, and because we have put in the

If Not Anarchy, What Is It?

The Philadelphia street car strike, and its attendant resistance to law, furnishes an example of what violent and intemperate leadership will accomplish.

Following publication of a statement alleged to have been made by John J. Murphy, president of the Central Labor union that "a general strike should be called immediately. I think it is inevitable. There are men in North Dakota that can shoot as straight as any trooper who ever drew a breath," a warrant was issued for the labor leader, charging him with "inciting to riot."

Upon the heels of the arrest come threats from other union leaders to precipitate sympathetic strikes. And the trouble is all the bound up in the proposition laid down so forcibly by Theodore Roosevelt, that "any man has a right to work for wages that are mutually satisfactory to himself and his employer."

It requires no argument to prove that the person who seeks forcibly, to prevent a citizen from exercising that right is an anarchist, because an anarchist is one who defys the law and would abolish it if he could.

Fair minded, conservative citizens do not deny the necessity for labor unions, nor the right of such organizations to "strike out" under certain conditions, but they dispute the right of any man or set of men to prevent others from leasing their places if they so desire.

The strikers are by no means confined to the unions in these outbreaks; but there are enough of them to form a nucleus, around which the anarchists, foes and criminal rabble of the cities—exiles from other lands and ultra socialistic agitators of our own.

The law is supreme, and only by its enforcement is the welfare of the people secure. Force illegally used must be met with, the force which the law provides, and when the law fails to subdue illegally directed force, anarchy exists as surely as it did in the days of the French commune.

No train of socialistic reasoning can justify resistance to law.

Some Salt Water Fishing

The following from the Gloucester (Mass.) Times, will interest local fishermen:

"A farc of seined pollock thus early in the season is the feature of the fishing arrivals here today. The lucky craft was the steamer Nomad, and she had aboard 40,000 pounds and about 10 miles off Thacher's island yesterday. The fish were schooling so plentifully that other crafts would have had no trouble in filling up, had they been there.

The Nomad has been gill netting all winter and yesterday put the nets ashore and took on a seine and went after the pollock which have been reported schooling off Thacher's island for the past two weeks.

"The crew struck them all right, and when the craft came in, her scuppers were in the water. The fish had will bring $1,000 or more, as pollock are high, being quoted at $3 at Boston today.

"Yesterday afternoon five of the shore boats landed small fares and sch. Paragon, Capt. William Henson, came in before dark, with a nice half trip, 12,000 pounds.

"The Paragon's catch probably market usual trip yesterday, bringing in 6,500 pounds of fresh fish.

"This morning sch. Juno, Capt. John G. Hogan, came in from the Gully with about 18,000 pounds of halibut and a few salt fish. Capt Stream reports good weather of late and a nice chance home, the vessel being just 48 hours from The Gully to this port.

How She Escaped.

Pimples will had been attending school for almost two weeks, when fell sing of the unfortunate fate of some of her little classmates. At her mother's question as to whether it had cost them anything for the teacher to attach it, Daisy Pimples answered, quickly, "Oh, no mamma." Then, "Tim had to spend a dollar on the class bill one this afternoon." "Why, what did she say?" "Oh, she said, 'Now children, we'll all stick Daisy Pimples in to order.'"—The Delineator.

Northern Michigan

Reports are to the effect that quantities of Mackinaw trout are being caught through the ice on Torch Lake. In five days last week William Wood caught 117. Same good catches were made on the bay Sunday.

Wilbur E. Campbell, for several months past business manager of the Iron River Reporter, has gone to Detroit to take charge of a small job printing establishment which he recently purchased in the heart of the city. For years Campbell was located at Northport as editor of the Leader.

Central Lake Torch: The Central Lake Creamery company, which was organized five years ago, was reorganized at a meeting held in the office of Smallegan, Smith & Co., Monday evening. The first organization was never perfected and it was thought best to reorganize entirely. It was decided to lease the building now occupied by the company for five years. The creamery is simply bought here now and shipped to Traverse City where the creamery is located, but if the increase in business will warrant it the company will install a creamery here and conduct the entire business in this village.

Pelosky News: The executive committee of the Emmet County Fair Association held a meeting at the office of secretary L. A. Lilly, Thursday afternoon, and one of the important matters of business was the fixing of the dates for Emmet county's fair for the coming season. The fair next season will be held a little earlier than usual, Sept. 6, 7, 8 and 9, being fixed on the dates. The Ford motion fair will be held Sept. 13, 14, 15 and 16, and the fair at Petoskey will be held Sept. 20, 21, 22 and 23. We understand that the West Michigan state fair at Grand Rapids will be held during the week of September 13.

Traverse City Record: J. H. Smedley, head of the Helmut rib timbering job on the Beaver, arrived in the city today, having completed the work on Beaver Island the day before. The trip was very enjoyable being made in a covered scow equipped with a stove. Among the passengers was a woman and a little boy. "Conditions couldn't be better. Island life is fine but for five weeks we were without mail. Everything is now laven up so tightly that we get our mail three times a week, two miles going across. One of them, William Gibson, has been making the trip for years." There are some half a hundred men on the Helmuth job now but Mr. Helmuth will take back a few contbock men and teamsters.

Fire on Thursday destroyed the dry kiln, containing the stock thereto, of East Jordan Cooperage company, causing a loss of $13,000, fully insured. The fire was a stubborn one and for a time it appeared the entire plant of the company, one of the biggest of the kind in this section of the state, might go up in smoke, but the efficient work of the firemen finally confined it to the kiln. One of the firemen was slightly injured, two fingers being smashed, and the fumes from the burning, steaming wood were so dense that several were nearly overcome. The plant will be only temporarily crippled, as the kiln will be rebuilt at once. The origin of the fire is unknown, but is thought to have started from a superheated kiln or from a spark falling in some rubbish.

Traverse City Eagle: Glen Zook returned to this city Tuesday after spending several months in a camp on High Island, on Lake Michigan. The trip was made with no less than little trouble and inconvenience, some three hundred miles, on the scow Ida. Mr. Zook, in company with Mr. Bennett, William Dunn and Frank Darby, left High Island on Sunday to move to Beaver Island on their way home. The storm came up and they were lost for several hours, after which they found themselves back on the island they had left. In their wanderings through the blinding snow storm they had to feed their scow with their axes, some of the times the blades going through or into the open water. Later they made the trip between the islands all right and without mishap. For the trip to the mainland these men were joined by Harry Lewis and Anthony Malloy, the latter a butcher who brought the bunch over with his team. The trip covered over 50 miles because open water was found and the party drove alongside of the same for more than 20 miles, finally making the main shore at Sturgeon bay, and with scarcely greater energy then they advanced they returned, the purpose of their journey pursuers in hot chase. My blood is up. It is a murderous world, and I have begun to hate this filthy, cutthroat shrub we inhabit."

"I pursue them upstream, up to their villages. I skirmish in their streets, drive them pelmell into the forests, let loose and level their ivory temples. With frantic heels I fire their huts and end the scene by tossing their carcass into mistresses and setting them adrift."

RAVENOUS EATERS.

Gluttony of Soliman and the Appetite of Louis XIV.

Touching the matter of eating, the stories told by the chronicles and biblotanes of the abnormal appetites of certain Roman and oriental men of note fairly stagger belief.

Gibbon tells of Soliman, a caliph in the eighth century, who died of acute indigestion in his camp near Cholcis, in Syria, just as he was about to lead an army of Arabs against Constantinople. He had supplied two baskets of eggs and figs, which he swallowed alternately, and to them was washed down with marrow and sugar. In a pilgrimage to Mecca the same caliph had eaten with frugality at a single meal seventy pomegranates, a kid, six fowls and a large quantity of the sweet cake of Tayef.

Such a statement would defy belief were not others of a similar character well recorded. Louis XIV could hardly boast of an appetite as ravenous as Soliman's, but he would eat at a sitting four platefuls of different soups, a whole pheasant, a partridge, a plate full of salad, some mutton with garlic, two good sized slices of ham, a dish of pastry and finish the whole repast with fruit and sweetmeats.—London Saturday Review.

THE LOST UMBRELLA.

A Torrent of Thanks Did Not Accompany Its Recovery.

It was on a train coming through southern Wisconsin. On board was one of those limp, rumple comely crones that India's art has taught us to know. One woman sat only descended on her implement with it a thrilling inquiry:

"Where's that umbrell of mine?"

"I dunno," gro wled the husband.

"Well, you had it last."

"Didn't neither."

"You did, too, and you've got to go back 'cross the line. I let it slip forrend. Thery was a man sat a-settin' before me name back by er."

More growling on the husband, which was sleepy.

"You got to go back an' hunt it, anyway."

She took him and went forward, over 50 miles because open water was found and the party drove alongside of the same for more than 20 miles, finally making the main shore at Sturgeon bay, and with scarcely greater energy then they advanced they returned, the purpose of their journey pursuers in hot chase. My blood is up. It is a murderous world, and I have begun to hate this filthy, cutthroat shrub we inhabit."

STANLEY AS A FIGHTER.

His Revenge on the Africans For Attacking His Forces.

In the following letter, quoted by Sir Henry M. Stanley describes an attack of natives upon his party during one of his African expeditions: "The lestabbas burn down on us with racing speed, the camp is on other side of the rapids, the water into foam and shooting on us with the intent to annihilate. I carry a chest from 2000 thousand, plus rubber and ivory and immediately. Presently the poised spears are launched, and a second later my ears ring with a piping, whistling accompaniment, and the dark bodies of the cowards and pusillanimous. 25.

"For a short time the savages are paralyzed, but they soon recover. They find there is death in those flaming tubes by the hands of the Zanzibaris, and with scarcely greater energy then they advanced they retreat, the purpose of their journey pursuers in hot chase. My blood is up. It is a murderous world, and I have begun to hate this filthy, cutthroat shrub we inhabit."

It May Affect Many State Appointive Officers and Commissions.

The Illinois Supreme Court, by its opinion in the Joyce parole case, declaring the law establishing the parole board to be unconstitutional, has caused a political panic in the Statehouse. Interpretation of the opinion by State officers who prefer not to talk yet for publication is that close construction of the Joyce opinion makes it extremely questionable whether more than one-half of the appointive officers and commissions of the State are constitutional or that the men holding these places can lawfully draw their salaries.

These officers and commissions are declared to be in the identical predicament with the parole board, which was relieved off the map by the Supreme Court decision.

The board of administration of public charities.

The fire marshal.

The pure food commission.

The state mine examining board.

The mining investigating commission.

The secretaries to the Supreme justices.

The grades scale attached to the state garage to be then applied to rooms from a close reading of the judicial view that an act creative of an office or a commission, which is silent in its title as to the salary or compensation of the officer or board therein named, but which in the body of the act creates the position, or appropriates for compensation of those officers, is unconstitutional so far as it applies to payment.

POSTOFFICES ARE PROSPEROUS.

Increase in Receipts Reflects Improved Business Conditions.

An unusually large increase is reported at the city largest postoffices of the country during January. Postmaster of the Chicago office reports an increase in receipts as compared with the corresponding month of last year. The increases varied from 1.72 per cent at Dayton, O., to 27.81 per cent at Hartford, Conn. The five postoffices showing the greatest percentage of increase in receipts over January of last year were Hartford, Conn.; Springfield, Mass.; Burlington, Vt.; Toledo, O., and Chicago, Ill. The general increase over the same period of last year is 11.27 per cent. This is taken as evidence of a decided improvement in business conditions throughout the country.

KILLED AND HURT IN THEATER.

Floor Suddenly Collapses Because of Dynamo in Basement.

Five hundred persons attending a small theater at Patton, Pa., were precipitated into the basement of the building when the floor collapsed during a film, and one person was killed. The fire started from an unknown origin, in the basement of the building, while the theater on the first floor was filled with persons watching a moving picture show. By the time smoke began to appear in the room the floor had already been weakened by the flames, and when the panic-stricken people began the floor collapsed, allowing the struggling crowd to drop a mass to the basement. The entire structure was burned. A score were injured seriously, several of them fatally.

Arthur T. Leith Returns to Washington from Labrador Wilds.

Mourned as dead by his wife and friends for the last twelve months, Arthur T. Leith, a geologist, explorer and hunter, has returned safe and well, from the frozen regions of Labrador to his home in Washington. Mr. Leith started out last summer from the north shore of Lake Superior, with his brother, Dr. C. K. Leith, professor of geology in the University of Wisconsin, R. S. Adams of Duluth and Hugh Roberts of Superior, Wis. They went into the north of the Labrador trading post of Great Whale. Dr. Leith and Mr. Roberts made their way home in the fall, but the other two men remained until Christmas and experienced terrible hardships.

DEATH LAID TO WITCHCRAFT.

Parents Never Ill, but 17 Out of 20 Children Die Mysteriously.

That seventeen of Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Carr's children died as the result of witchcraft was stated by the parents in Reading, Pa. A daughter, 25 years of age, was buried a few days ago. The majority of the children died when quite young. The parents have never been ill a single day, while their children wasted almost to skeletons several, physicians said, were afflicted with marasmus, a wasting of the brain without any fever or spinal disease, while "pow wow" doctors declared the little ones were bewitched by an old woman.

ONE KILLED, 11 SHOT IN CAIRO MOB CHARGE

Angry Men Storm Prison in Effort to Lynch Negro Youths for Purse Snatching.

SHERIFF AND DEPUTIES FIRE.

Dozen Orders Out the Militia, Which Is Held in Readiness for Serious Work.

A single volley from the force of 50 armed deputy sheriffs in the county jail in Cairo, Ill., the other night probably averted the second lynching of a negro in Cairo in four months. In the fusillade, in which eleven shots were fired, one of the members of the mob was killed and at least two injured.

Two hundred men, who had been incited to violence by a man related to Miss Anna Pelley, whose murder physicians say, by strangling, died in white "Frogale" James and Henry Salzer were lynched, stormed the jail shortly after midnight. After the sheriff's men had fired the mob retreated the volley, breaking several windows in the jail. None of the deputies was injured, however. The militia company was ordered out by Gov. Deneen by long distance telephone after Sheriff Nellis had telephoned news of the riot to Springfield.

The trouble was precipitated by the arrest on Wednesday night, of a negro who, it is said, stole a watch and snatched purses from women. This man, whose name is John Pratt, was seized just after he had seized the purse of a young woman relative of Miss Pelley. Miss Pelley's brother, who is on a visit to Cairo from Bluefield, Ill., rounded up a dozen friends of the saloons, crying for vengeance for the insult offered his sister. Miss Pelley is a young woman of his family. This led to the formation of a mob of from fifty or sixty members. As this approached the jail it grew to more than two. It was ascertained that a young woman was in jail charged with having set fire to more than twenty-two houses in Cairo since Christmas. This fact, as it approached the jail, cried loudly for three two negroes, and when it failed to heed the warning shot by the sheriff he ordered his deputies to fire.

HOGS HIGHEST SINCE THE WAR.

Average Price Reaches $9.11, Breaking Half Century Mark.

Packers at the Chicago stockyards paid more money for hogs Tuesday than on any day since the Civil War, the average cost being $7.11. The previous record day since 1865 was Monday, when the average price was $9.06. In May of 1870, when cattle were selling at unprecedented prices, hogs sold within a range of from $8.25 to $9.35, topping at 10 cents higher than the most recent figures, but showing an extreme range of $1, while of Tuesday's hogs toured within a range of 35 cents, the inside figure standing at 55 cents higher than in May. The top reached $9.50, but miles were made at $9.50 for light hogs. Files of the Tribune for 1865 show that in that year sales of hogs were made at $12.75, with $10 as the lowest price.

VOTES NEW FRANCHISE.

Cleveland Approves Street Car Company Under Certain Conditions.

By a majority of 8,117 Cleveland's voters the other day approved the Tom L. Taylor traction franchise grant giving to the Cleveland Railway Company a forty-five year franchise, 5 cent fare for three months and an hour longer as 6 per cent can be earned at that fare, the maximum fare being 4 cents, with a penny transfer charge, refund when the transfer is used. The end of the eleht-year traction war was brought about by a fight on several days filibuster, the final for the great-filing 27,207, and against 19,090.

CANADIAN TARIFF UP.

Secretary Knox Tries to Straighten Out a Complicated Tangle.

Officials in Washington are now deeply interested in the question of the application of the maximum or the minimum tariff to Canada. Secretary of State Knox has communicated to G. Foster, United States consul general at Ottawa, in Washington for consultation.

Ambassador Bryce has, it is stated, entirely misunderstood the friendly expressions of President Taft with reference to Canada, and the United States has been represented as "easy" by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. As a result Canada seems to have adopted a close understanding with France that neither is to make any concessions, in the belief that if Canada evades the maximum France will also be able to evade it.

If the United States government had formal assurances from Canada that the Canadian government would continue to accord concessions to the United States the situation would be regarded as very critical indeed. That is to say, the American maximum would almost certainly be applied on Canadian products and the Canadian surtax of 25% per cent would be added to American imports into Canada.

YOUNGSTOWN CONVERTED.

"Billy" Sunday Brings 6,500 Into Fold in Ohio's "Toughest City."

One of the most spectacular religious demonstrations ever witnessed occurred at the Youngstown (Ohio) tabernacle when Billy Sunday concluded "Billy" Sunday closed his six-week campaign in that city, converted 6,500 of the most wicked city in Ohio. The thousands who heard the evangelist deliver the most hair-raising addresses that ever came from his lips became almost frenzied. In fact, it is said, while a wind had snatched purses from women. This wind, whose name is John Pratt, was seized just after he had seized the purse of a young woman relative of Miss Pelley. Miss Pelley's brother, who is on a visit to Cairo from Bluefield, Ill., rounded up a dozen friends of the saloons, crying for vengeance for the insult offered his sister. A woman of his family. ROB AN ILLINOIS BANK OF $8,500 AND ESCAPE

Burglars Blow Safe in Citizens' National at Chatsworth, Ill., and Steal Cash.

BIND AND GAG TWO MEN.

Explosions Ruin Structure, but Wake No Citizens—Bandits Flee in a Buggy.

The Citizens' National bank of Chatsworth, Ill., was entered early the other day by burglars, who fled with $8,500 after blowing open the safe and bearing the bank's cashier and a bookkeeper.

Five armed men approached the night policeman near the pumping plant of the water works of Chatsworth and bound and gagged him. Afterward they took him to a garage near the Citizens' bank, where they left him under guard. A baker employed in a nearby bakery was also bound, gagged and placed under guard in the garage.

The watchman and baker were the only residents awake in the business section at the time. After securing these men four of the robbers took a buggy and team from the garage, went to the bank and began working with deliberation to get at the money. They blew the large outer door off the safe, then the inner door. The first explosion wrecked the interior of the bank. After blowing open the second door the burglars packed themselves to the money inside. They took $6,500 in gold and $2,000 in silver, and, invoked them to continue, and at the end of the services was accompanied by his bride to Sunday's tabernacle meeting, where there was another call for decisions, and there were over 2,000 people, anxious to hear and see the evangelist, who came out from the tabernacle. More than $10,000 was raised Sunday for Mr. Sunday, the only collection taken during the revival, for his personal use.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Chicago Trade says:

A slight comparative decrease in the volume of payments through the clearing houses, attributed to interfering with freight movements, rising security markets and still higher bank rates for borrowing, and meets furnish the outstanding features of current development. There is also a slight increase in the demand in prominent branches of manufacture, which is due to temporary causes and does not weaken confidence in the general business outlook.

Commercial defaults in both number and liabilities make the best exhibit thus far this year, and the position of credits is very encouraging and favorable to a larger use of capital. Other gratifying features which may be mentioned are the easier tendencies in money and the steady progress which appears in production of the mills and factories.

Money accumulation appears in piles, with prices more favorable to tanners, and the buying is steady in hides, while cattle and sheepskin finishing materials again are under wheels. Prices for the coming spring work. Country buyers attend the general merchandise markets in remarkable force and the buying is broad in dry goods, millinery, clothing, shoes and heavy hardware.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district last week, 19, against last week, 25 in 1909 and 41 in 1908. There with liabilities over $5,000 in the Chicago district, 7 last week, 6 in 1909 and 12 in 1908."

NEW YORK

Trade reports are rather more cheerful. Visible evidences of expansion in the business world are in accordance with the advance of the season, are found in the great rush of the large number of buyers in the leading markets, especially in the dry goods trade. Jobbers of the South, have taken hold more freely, although even in the markets of the North, where, whenever the best reports come, there are evidences of conservatism, especially on the high prices asked for goods. The least favorable feature in the country's trade at present is the continued sagging in export trade in farm products, at effective prices, which is due to high ocean rates for breadstuffs, meats, animals and cotton.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending Feb. 17 were 300, as against 244 last week, 262 in the like week of 1909, 326 in 1908, 177 in 1907 and 186 in 1906—Bradstreet's.

After six weeks' work the steamer Winchiloch, which went ashore on Grassy Island, Lake Winnebago, Dec. 12, has been floated.

The passenger plant of the Colorado Midland, which failed in October, has been sold to Denver capitalists.

Irvin Hawkett, a 15-year-old white boy of New Haven, Conn., was arrested on a charge of complicity with the murder of Mary Tedder, who was found in a trunk in Tedder's home.

An east bound Denver and Rio Grande passenger train was derailed at Woodside, Utah, the Pullman coming down an embankment into a river. Seven passengers were injured.

State Senator Timothy Sullivan (Tim), of New York, underwent an operation and is now resting under ether. But only the most powerful drugs kept him alive. His condition is still critical.

HASTINGS LANDS INDUSTRY.

Company Organized and Furniture Factory to Go Up.

A company composed of Hastings and Grand Rapids manufacturers has been organized to manufacture furniture in Hastings, and work on the construction of a factory will begin as soon as weather conditions will permit. The building will be three stories high, 40 feet by 100 feet, 16 feet by 60 feet wide, to which will be added a wing 100 feet long by 40 feet wide. It is expected that the building will be completed and machinery installed so that work may begin during the latter part of the summer. The new factory was obtained by the Board of Trade of Hastings. The manufacturing committee appointed by the City Council is also considering the proposals of companies who may locate there.

TWO WOULD BUILD ROAD.

Rival Capitalists Plance on Grand Rapids-Battle Creek Interurban.

A battle royal is on which bands of capitalists can get an interurban rolling between Grand Rapids and Battle Creek is now threatened by the arrival on the scene of C. A. Goodale, a Chicago capitalist, who has secured about 50 per cent of a right of way via Hastings, Middleville and Caledonia. Goodale road would go through Calhoun, Barry and Kent counties. Nonwalkie Col. W. V. Lucas has a forty-year franchise in the property of connecting Kalamazoo, Battle Creek and Grand Rapids via Gull Lake. Grand Rapids capitalists having offered to invest $150,000 of Kalamazoo money in the smaller towns along the route raises three similar sums to build the road.

WATERED MILK COSTS DEARLY.

Sixty-six Offenders Taxed $1,225 in Ionia County Court.

Justice Gibson of Ionia has made his fine of $1,225 against sixty-six of Ionia County's dairy farmers for watering the milk they delivered to the Ionia Milk Company during the month of February. The fines were assessed in the form of a penalty of one dollar for each offense. Two of the offenders paid a substantial sum for the privilege of watering their product, and altogether it proved the most expensive milk-watering job ever put up in Michigan. The Page company is now getting milk satisfactory in every respect.

STOLE TO BUY GIRL FINERY.

Muskegon Boy Arrested for Burglary Makes Confession.

Through the confession of Ray Fox, the youthful Muskegon burglar arrested by the police for robbing the home of his neighbors, a twelve-year-old girl realizes that her lyre of finery has brought her little face to face with the prison doors. Fox has made a clean breast of the matter, and he says that he was misled and all the money stolen went to the purchase of finery for the young woman. She thought he enjoyed a lucrative position, which he was known to have had more thefts to keep up the deception, until finally the officers caught him.

Injured in Runaway.

Clyde Torrence, aged twelve, was probably fatally injured when his team ran away in Kalamazoo. He was thrown from the wagon when the team turned a corner and was found a few minutes later unconscious beside the street.

MINOR STATE ITEMS.

The general store of H. Jaffe, in Ionia, was burned last week. The Loss, $1,000, partly insured.

M. J. Weaver, vice president of the Grand Rapids Trust, and former vice president of the Sault Ste. Marie Ship Canal, died at Grand Rapids.

John Kilbs, who stole 92 pennies from the Mt. Morris river Marquette road station, was sentenced to serve 90 days in the Detroit house of correction.

Charles Cadwell, aged 56, started up stairs to his room in the third floor of the family house in Ionia. Just before reaching the top landing he fell and died before a physician could be summoned.

August Schwartz, aged 17 years, was killed near quilty in Menominee of murdering a man named Broderski, whose wife, a sister of Schwartz's mother, eloped with Schwartz's father, and settled in Jesus, land in band with a corrupt priesthood.

The church of today may not be under the accusation of graft. It is accused of being "poor" But cure ought regard business and their dealings with society as sacred as any other sins. Nothing can be more depraved and revolt with a live conscience than the attempt to take advantage of others, to deal dishonestly, to get something for nothing.

There are two ways to deal with it, and both are necessary. First, the whip of cords for those who are beyond redemption. They are to be driven out of the temple of religion of an aroused public conscience. Jesus said that the publicans and harlots go in before. They were old in sin, so he drove them forth. Not one moment's time did he permit them to pollute His Father's house.

The Alpena council has passed a resolution agreeing to do everything in its power to close the streets and alleys in the vicinity of the building of a $75,000 depot by the D. & M. Railway in that city. The depot will be built this year.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR

Frankfort Makes a Lusty Kick.

The Benzie County Patriot, published at Frankfort, comes back at the Sentinel, with a attributic challenge of its last week's statement that greater tonnage passed through the lower Charlevoix bridge than docked at both Frankfort and Petoskey. We shall not retract the statement.

He gives circuit custom house figures for that port, which, of course, cannot be disputed; otherwise the entire arraignment could easily be impeached by one reckless statement,—that "their levees is open for navigation for nine mis als months in the year, and the rest of the year there is nothing doing." The statement discloses a depth of ignorance that manifestly unfits the editor for the championship of any public interest. Frankfort harbor is open to navigation for nine months of the year, dear brother.

In the Sentinel article we stated that, owing to peculiar government regulations, less than one eight of the tonnage in this harbor becomes a matter of official record; whereas, everything at Frankfort reports and clears. The Frankfort editor challenges us to show official figures to prove our statement. Owing to the reasons plainly stated last week we cannot comply, much to our regret. There is absolutely no record of the tonnage that passes in and out at this port, except that very small percentage which makes Charlevoix its terminus.

The inferior waters which officially constitute Charlevoix harbor in the record of the engineers have manufacturing industries that throw Frankfort so far in the shade that the contrast practically eliminates the latter from all consideration as an industrial port. The up-lake shipperes of lumber and iron have nothing of registered tonnage in their bills of lading.

The burden of proof rests with the Patriot. We stand by our statement. We challenge a comparison. If you can, dear brother.

The U. S. Fish Hatchery.

The government fish hatchery went into commission Tuesday of this week, first consignment of eggs arriving on the hemoglaziers plant at Northlake on Monday.

The additional troughs placed in the cellar room of the old water works plant increases the capacity of the local plant by three fold, while the original hatchery has been overhauled and improved by the installation of gas pipe frames for the troughs in place of the former wood work. In the annex the same frame-work has been adopted, which means that the "Fish Shanty" at least until Mr. Clark's hopes are realized and the whole concentrated in a new plant at a spot in Charlevoix upon which the citizens superintendent has his eye.

A. T. Stewart is in charge, with an experienced assistant, and another man is expected from Nartnville this week. The eggs must all be picked over for dead material, and for this six or eight girls will be employed. Fifteen million of trout and twenty five million of whitefish eggs will be hatched, which will take until about May first.

All this means that fully thirty-five millions of young fry will be planted in the fishing territory contiguous to Charlevoix and Beaver Island next spring.

Historical Society.

The Charlevoix Historical Society will meet Friday evening, March 4th, with Mr. and Mrs. Buttars. Following is the the program:

Music.
The Slumber Boat—Ladies Quartette.
Current Events—Rev. H. A. Cutman.
Social Intermission.
Vocal duet—Dr. and Mrs. Allan Wilkinson.
Sketches of Michigan History—Mrs. A. Buttars.
Singing by Society—"Michigan My Michigan."

Automatic Doctors.

Amsterdam now boasts of automatic doctors. The business representative a man and in the region of each organ is a slot designed to receive a 15 cent piece and a button. The patient suffering drops his coin into the slot and without delay a prescription is shot out bearing the address of an apothecary, whither he takes the card and receives his medicine.

REMINISCENCES

An Old Settler Calls Up Memories of the Old Days, When Suckers Ran Up Pine River.

Charlevoix, Feb. 27, 1910.

Charlevoix Sentinel:

Your article in the last issue on old Charlevoix homes brings memories to many who happened to be dwellers and home-owners in Charlevoix in those early days. Some of the memories are pleasant while others are clouded with sorrow. Like many of the buildings, many of their owners have passed beyond, while those who remain have greatly changed.

The building of homes in those days was beset with difficulties unknown to the builders of the present day. Mechanics were scarce, and, with many, money was scarcer. The master mechanic at the erection of the old post office building you speak of was known as "Injun Brown," and I do not believe that he ever made shavings enough to any one day's work to kindle a fire the next morning.

About every house built in those early days could easily be made the subject of an interesting tale, fictitious more or less with romance. At least such a one was the house erected on the Main and Dixon lines near where that line touched the shore of Round Lake. It will be remembered by early settlers that right there was a beauty spot of soft, smooth, velvety sward, with a narrow opening through the clustering balsams to a canoe landing at the water's edge.

For me that spot had a charm. What a city little nook in which to build a home. The thought was acted upon, and the site for the house was secured that from whence was to come the material? Resolution, backed by some money, in a short time had the material on the ground. Then the putting of it together pursuant of the nature of an old-fashioned bee, or "raising." A few of the neighbors and mechanics were invited, and on the day appointed were on hand and early at work, some placing foundation blocks, others overhauling boards and joists.

The squares and scratch-awls were handled by such men as Wm. Miller, Mr. Rockwell, S. S. Wakefield and John Horton, and the hammers and saws by whoever could wield them. However, with noise and clatter and much good cheer the work went merrily on, and ere the sun had hid himself beath the waters of old Lake Michigan a snug little eighteen by twenty four house stood roofed and ready for occupancy, save the doors and windows, which were in place in a few days and the happy owners were soon installed in a rent-free home.

One difficulty met and partially overcome, when, behold a new comedy in a week or two there came one of those gloomy days, with lowering clouds and fitful breezes, when old Lake Michigan undertook a sultry growl, as if angry for being disturbed. About four o'clock in the afternoon a goodly log-book floated on the lake and swamped the shore. The fallen growl burst into a fierce, deafening roar, and the fitful breeze changed to a fifty mile gale.

As it struck the shore the trees bent low, many never to rise again. On seeing what was coming I hastened to the house, and by the time I arrived it required the strength of two to close the door. When the full force of the gale and the danger of rain struck the house we could easily imagine that it was the founding cookers from the lake that were being swept inland over the shelf. A dense gust, a hatch, grating sound and a quite perceptable movement under foot, together with the cry of the wife that the house was going, was a combination of exciting conditions under which it was a little difficult to appear calm.

However, I succeeded so far as to be told that I would laugh if the house and all it contained was going into the lake. When the noise seemed to settle back we thought of another danger that threatened. In case the gale veered to the north, as it seemed inclined, our lives were certainly in danger. A large branch stood a few feet from the house, and on opening the door to examine the situation, it was found to be a serious menace to the house. To be safe was considered better than to be sorry afterward, so, while the wind was favorable, it was thought best (o fall the tree, notwithstanding the storm. To think was to act in these days, and I was soon swinging my axe with all the might that I possessed, and I will guarantee that no woodman ever swung his axe any faster or more furiously. With the help of the gale the crash soon came. I then with strength exhausted and wet with sweat and rain, I sought the shelter of the structure that was erected for the humble home of the village blacksmith, but honored in those latter days as a part and parcel of Baker's Inn.

Yours in remembrance of old times,

ROBERT MILLER.

Men.

It is sometimes hard to tell whether a man is a knave or a fool, but he is neither till he is found out.—New York Times.

"Toymakers Make Good."

Everyone has read the story of "Quincy Adams Sawyer," written by Charles Felton Pidgin, the Chief of Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics. It had an immense circulation and was dramatized and played all over the country. "The Toymakers" is the latest book written by Mr. Pidgin and he has also written the play which has been set to music, and in twenty-six lyrical numbers makes up a delicious musical comedy full of fun and frolic. At last we have something new and clever that really amuses the public and keeps the audiences in a gale of laughter from beginning to end. It is said to be the best combination of bright dialogue, comical situations and good music seen on the stage in years

A village toyship in Old England furnishes a rich background for this unique story of the mechanical doll, that was brought to lifelike electricity and performed the wonderful feats that astounded and delighted the villager and also the audience. There is every opportunity here for a rich set, and Mr. Pidgin has lived up to his reputation. The fine company of singers, dancers and comedians, "The Toymakers," will give this jolly opera at the Charlevoix Theatre on Thursday night, March 3, for one night only, and they carry their own scenery and artistic costumes, designed for "The Toymakers" especially. Two Boston composers, Charles D. Blake and John A. Bennett, wrote the catchy music, all entirely new and original. Those who have read the book have a still great er treat in store and everyone will soon be singing these bright melodies. Tickets on sale at Chapel's.

The Basket Ball Games.

Charlevoix high school basket ball team its Waterloo when it blundered against the Kalkaska high school team on the latters' floor last Friday evening. The localboys were no match for the last years state championship who threw baskets from every conceivable angle and all of the time. At times the locals would show some excellent playing but soon Kalkaska would start their brilliant team work and the boys would be totally lost. Never before has Charlevoix played a team which handled the ball so neatly and the score of 105 to 22 shows how accurate Kalkaska were in shooting baskets.

Charlevoix went to Kalkaska to learn something of good basket ball as they believe that the best way to learn a game is by playing games that know how, and Charlevoix learned quite a good deal last Friday.

Saturday the girl's team went to Boyne City where they played the cadets first to the Manceloia-Boyne City boys' game. The first few minutes of the game things looked well for Charlevoix, but the older and experienced Boyne City girls began to forge ahead and the local girls were out of the game. The final score was 37 2. The girls are not discouraged, but feel that with the same experience that other teams have had, they can make a good showing The girls as well as the boys lack the ability to handle the ball accurately in getting it in the basket, when under the excitement and stress of the game This defect can only be remedied by experience and we must wait patiently.

Friday evening, March 4th, the local basket ball season closes with two games. The county normal girls have challenged the high school girls to a return game on that date. Two weeks ago the high school girls defeated the normal girls by a close score and the normal girls are anxious to turn the tables if possible. The big game of the evening is the boys' game with Manceloia. For the past three years Manceloia has been noted for her basket ball teams. This year she is as strong as ever. The Charlevoix team has improved wonderfully since the Kalkaska game and will make Manceloia hustle all the way through. The local boys have had a discouraging season, playing many close games but not often winning. They deserve more credit and encouragement for playing their hardest even though almost certain of defeat than does a team which has won all its games.

Every one come out Friday evening to help the boys win their last game First game starts at eight o'clock.

County Normal Notes.

The county normal class accompanied by Miss Reed attended the institute at Boyne City, Feb. 25 and 26. They drove over. Friday morning returning Saturday afternoon. Miss Hines was not able to go on account of suffering with a severe cold.

Margaret Watson did not attend the institute, but instead substituted for Miss Jarvis in the north ward school. Isabel Knight also substituted for Miss Jarvis one day last week, as Miss Jarvis has been having trouble with her eyes.

Some very attractive carpet designs have been made recently by the class in connection with their work in carpet problems in arithmetic. The designs are intended to show waste in matching patterns in laying carpet.

Emma Hannanson and Arbutus Nordrum went to Petoskey Thursday night, Feb. 24, and from there went to Boyne City on Friday to attend the institute. Miss Hannanson returned with the class on Saturday and Miss Nordrum went on to Cadillac returning Monday morning.

Sara Cooper, class of '05, who is now teaching at Phelps, Pearl Hurst, class of '09, who is teaching the Hoppard school, and Edith Bowditch, class of '09, who is teaching in Marion township, joined the sleighload of normal students in driving to Boyne City.

The sad news has been received of the death of Miss Susie Sheldon, at East Jordan, Feb. 27. Miss Sheldon was a member of last year's class and was very greatly loved by her classmates and by the many friends she made while in Charlevoix.

The Sun's Vapors.

"Chromosphere" is the name given to a layer of incandescent vapors in the sun, enveloping the entire photosphere. The chromosphere consists chiefly of hydrogen and an element known as helium. The so-called "prominences" are due to projections of hydrogen that at times rise to enormous altitudes, with velocities exceeding 140 miles per second. The chromosphere is given, than to this solar envelope on account of its beautiful rosy hue.

Saved a Soldier's Life.

Facing death from shot and shell in the civil war was more agreeable to J. A. Stone of Kemp, Tex., than facing it from what doctors said was consumption. "I contracted a stubborn cold" he writes, "that developed a cough, that stuck to me in spite of all remedies for years. My weight ran down to 120 pounds. Then I began to use Dr. King's New Discovery, which completely cured me. I now weigh 178 pounds." For coughs, colds, lagrippe, asthma, bronchitis, hoarseness, croup, whooping cough and lung trouble, its supreme. 50c & $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by F. G. Hines & Co.

—Ice conditions are not as news discouraging. Most of the time the vast week a broad expanse of blue water has been visible to the westward and northward from a point about six miles out, the same conditions being reported from Beaver Island. But prophesies as to the probable date of the opening of navigation are not yet in order.

—Price Brothers, of East Jordan, who have the contract for the rebuilding of the front of the Van Pelt building, (formerly Harsha block,) have begun placing the material on the ground. The plans adopted will entirely change the appearance of the structure. Where somewhat different, the front will be, in architectural effect, fully equal to that of the postoffice building. As before announced the work on the ground floor will be occupied by M. A. Levinson & Co. It is hoped to have the work entirely completed next month.

—The "court house bunch" got a bad scare Monday morning. On a trip up state Clerk Payton smelled smoke, and called out Judge Harris from the probate office, who also at once saw that something was burning somewhere. The smoke increased rapidly, and the crowds of the building was made. Nothing wrong was found in the main building, but on going outside the smoke was still more in evidence. The source of the trouble was found in the engine room annex. In a pit under the Sisby an oil store was kept for keeping the water in the boiler warm. This had caught fire, igniting the board with which the pit was lined. The steamer and hose cart were trained out and the incipient blaze quickly quenched.

—Mrs. Emily S. Hart passed away very suddenly Saturday, March 5th, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. H. W. Kane. Deceased was well known years ago to the people of Charlevoix as one of the first of the resorters on the grounds now owned by the Charlevoix Summer House Association. Her husband, J. T. Hart, was a builder who put up a number of the cottages on that resort and himself was a cottage owner. Mr. Hart passed away about twelve years ago. Since that time Mrs. Hart has been residing a part of the time in Chicago and a part of the time in California, coming to Charlevoix and taking up her home with Mrs. Kane in August, 1908.

The deceased was seventy three years of age. To those who knew her, it is unnecessary to speak of the sterling and lovely qualities of womanhood which endeared her to all who were fortunate enough to enjoy her acquaintance.

She leaves a family of three children, Mrs. H. W. Kane and A. L. Hart, residents of Charlevoix, and Mr. C. H. Hart, of the Bradley Polytechnic Institute of Peoria, Ill.

Funeral services were held at the home of Mr and Mrs Kane Monday afternoon at four o'clock, her many friends taking occasion to express their appreciation of her and sympathy with the family in their loss by an exceedingly liberal contribution of flowers with many messages of love and hope and sympathy accompanying them. The body was taken for interment at Ionia, her former home and where her husband is buried.

—A letter from Capt. G. C. Gelkon, dated at Manitou Island, Feb. 21st, states that all are well on board and that fishing is fairly good. The tug, which takes out of Frankfort, has been hoodoed by the Manitou Island crew. The Captain facetiously remarks that the wardens in that locality are looking for photographs of Charlevoix fishermen to place in their rogues' gallery, and that the island farmers are expecting two new milch cows in the spring; also that the latest newspaper on the island is fifty years old. The letter illustrates that the inhabitants expect a consignment of "patent medicine" from the main land about the time the cows "come in." He adds, parenthetically and finally, that the next news from that quarter promises to be more "full." Captain and crew send their best wishes to friends at home.

—You are strong and full of life now, young man, just as your gray-haired father once was. While you are yet in the bright day of your vigor the old gentleman will pass to the beyond, and you, little as you think of it now, will become old and gray as he is now, and then, in the fullness of time, you too, will follow him. We in Charlevoix have had striking proofs of this fact within the last week, if it was not already patent to us. Life is too short, young man, to live thoughtlessly, because there is so much to think of in the brief journey. Write your name, young man, in the list of those who live to honor the memory and those who are nearest and dearest. Be manly man in all that constitutes true manhood.

ANOTHER PIONEER GONE

Death of Myron Geer, One of the Very Earliest Settlers of the Pine Lake Region.

In the death of Myron Geer, which said event occurred at one o'clock last Sunday at his home in this city, Charlevoix loses one of the very few remaining first white settlers of this immediate section of the Pine Lake region.

Deceased was born in the state of New York, coming to "Pine River" in 1847. As a young man he engaged in fishing during a number of those early years, and was here all through the troublesome Mormon days. Probably no living witness of the stirring events of that period had a broader knowledge of them than he. He knew King Strang personally, and was often on Beaver Island when that potentate ruled over the kingdom.

In 1865 he located a homestead in what is now Marion township, a little more than two miles south-east of this city. He developed the wooded homestead into a farm, and lived there continuously up to four years ago, when he sold the farm and moved to this city.

Mr. Geer has always been known as an industrious and honest man. He was a brother of Mrs. R. Cooper and Mrs. Jonn Paplinaw, of this city. A wife, three sons and two daughters survive him—Reuben and Elmer, of this city, Harry, of Cadillac, Mrs. Austin, of Traverse City, and Mrs. Pease, of Chicago.

The funeral occurred from the Congregational church Tuesday afternoon.

Death of Mrs. J. P. Hart.

GEORGE W. MILLER DEAD

Well Known and Popular Pioneer of Charlevoix Joins the Silent Majority at His Traverse City Home.

Geo. W. Miller, formerly of Charlevoix, died at his home in Traverse City early last Saturday morning of organic heart trouble, after a long illness, aged 58 years.

As a pioneer of the Grand Traverse region George Miller was "to the manner born," and as an early settler of Charlevoix he was among the first, barring only the few that were here in the old Emmet county days. He was, figuratively, at least, born in a wigwam, at Old Mission, where for a number of preceding years his father was Indian farmer and trader Probably there was not a person in the State who was more proficient in Indian lore than he, and there was no white man in his day who spoke the Ojibwa language more perfectly. He was always the court interpreter in Indian cases in this section, and always enjoyed the confidence of the Indian people. He was always their friend and adviser in matters affecting their interests.

When the mercantile firm of Fox, Rose & Buttars was established here, to succeed A. Fox & Co., in 1869, Mr. Miller, then barely eighteen years of age, accompanied Mr. Buttars here from Northport, entering the employ of that firm as a clerk. After several years in this service, and a few years as a traveling selling machine agent, he established himself in the clothing business in the Buttars block, at this place, and for several years continued in that enterprise. About ten years ago he sold out to F. M. Sears and went on the road for a Rochester clothing house, continuing that line of work for about five years, when he removed to Traverse City, starting out again in the retail clothing business. Two years ago he again sold out and entered the employ of the Hannah & Lay Mercantile Co., in their clothing department. He was in this employ when seized with his fatal illness.

He was married about twenty five years ago to Ida Whitcomb, a sister of Mrs. Amos Fox, Mrs. R. N. Parkner and Mrs. Louis Quick.

Mrs. Miller died here about fifteen years ago, leaving two young daughters—Myrtle and Lela—and also survive their bereaved father.

George Miller was a man of the strictest integrity, and was to a remarkable degree possessed of those qualities of tenderness that made him many warm friends. His generous heart has helped out many a pioneer in the old days, and his kindness and affection for his friends is well remembered by his pioneer associates.

He was a member of Traverse City Lodge, F. & A. m.

The funeral conducted in Traverse City Sunday, the remains arriving here for interment Monday morning, his Charlevoix Masonic brethren having charge of the ceremonies.

We take the following from the Traverse City Record: "While he was a man who made and retained a large number of friends, home to George Miller meant everything. His whole thought and life was wrapped up in his two daughters and he was never happier than when he was with them. Their pleasures were his pleasures and their friends his friends. His character is shown by the fact that not only were the men of his own age his friends, but there is many a young man in Traverse City today who, when he heard the announcement that the end had come, but felt that he too had lost a personal friend. But if ever a man was prepaid for care and love expended upon children it was George Miller, for his daughters, when his illness came, never left him night or day, and their faces were the last he gazed upon just before the Great Mystery was explained to him. Mr. Miller was fond of the out of doors, loving hunting and fishing, and when his daughters accompanied him on his trips about the country, he was perfectly satisfied."

CLAIMED THE ISLANDS

Commissioner of Indian Affairs Was Loaded for the Omena Indian and Sponsor.

A Chippewa Indian has turned up in Washington with the unique claim that the Indians of Michigan own all the islands in Lake Michigan. He is James M. Paul of Omena, Mich. He told the commissioner of Indian affairs that, according to the Indian traditions, the federal government never secured title to the chain of islands extending from South Manitou island on the south to Hog island on the north. There are twelve or fifteen of these islands. The largest is Beaver island. Paul asserts that the whites, when they bought the main land of Michigan, did not take over the islands, which were reserved for the use of the Indians. Subsequently, Paul says, the whites calmly moved onto all the islands and took possession. Only two are now occupied to any extent by Indians—Beaver Island and Hog Island.

A Washington special says: The claim on the part of the Lake Michigan may rest easy about the title of their property, according to present Government opinion. James M. Paul, the Omena redskin, is discouraged with the showing which has been made by the commissioner of Indian affairs. The commissioner, when Paul called with Congressman McLaughlin produced a treaty negotiated in 1836 in which it is stipulated clearly that after five years the islands should become property of the United States.

The only possibility upon which Paul has a chance to hang a hope is that the government did not secure the consent of the Indians in that provision of the treaty which insured the government possession of the islands.

The treaty as originally signed by the Indians and sent to the senate did make an exception of various islands and other tracts just as the Indian traditions say. But the senate, before ratifying the treaty, amended it to strike out the exceptions.

It was then provided that after five years the lands excepted by the original treaty would pass into the possession of the United States, just as the other lands secured by the treaty. This amendment was arbitrarily made by the senate. The treaty as thus amended was never submitted to the Indians for their approval. Congressman McLaughlin is now consulting authorities to determine whether submission to the Indians was necessary to make the treaty valid. The commissioner of Indian affairs holds that the senate had ample power to make the amendment, without considering the wishes of the Indians. That the Indians were bewildered at all, is held by the department to have been an act of courtesy, rather than a necessity.

The Carnegie Library.

As before stated in these columns, the Carnegie Library is completed and awaits occupancy.

But until the remains to be done before the books can be removed to their new quarters. The book stacks, of sufficient capacity for years, and are now being manufactured. The board of education has the matter of furniture in hand, and expect to order it soon.

It is confidently expected that the library will be dedicated and occupied about the first of May. Now that we have the building we hope that by some means the book supply will be augmented. If every public spirited citizen would contribute a few books from his private library, without duplication, the all-essential feature of this fine public building—books—would make a creditable showing when the place is opened to the public.

Disastrous Fire at Boyne City.

At nine o'clock Monday morning fire broke out in the New Boyne Hotel at Boyne City, and the big wooden building was totally destroyed with practically all its contents. A barber shop and cigar store adjoining were also formed to the ground, and the People's bank building was badly damaged.

The total loss is estimated at $50,000 with about $20,000 insurance. The New Boyne was the principal hotel of the city. Boyne City will now, without doubt, have an up-to-date hotel, something that has been sadly lacking in that enterprising city.

Professor William Smith, charged with an offense by two little boys, at Traverse City, was found not guilty by a jury at Bellaire, in Antrim county, after having been on the hours. Smith's defense was a general denial and evidence of his previous good character. The case, because of the feeling which prevailed in this county, was transferred to Antrim county.

The Wand of Sleep OR The Devil-Stick

By the Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," Etc.

CHAPTER XI. (Continued.)

In his despair he sat into the night, and his power of the night and sight followed up in the darkness with her companions. Long before the Major closed the window Lolind had turned the sentry, and then hastened back to the death-chamber, where he sang the lady a few minutes after midnight, half-astonished and half-amused, the result of his visit to the room on opposite side of the corridor. Long before daylight, the empty chair was occupied by the form of vicious coward "Blues all of you," said Lolind, contemptuously, "and not act, not self. Two of you take Barjaud to his room, and stay there in his place." Two men left the room with Barjaud, and Lolind turned to the bedroom, saying, "Now, Major, you can go to your bed." Turning to Barjaud, he said, "Good night, old fellow! Three more hours to shake off the drug."

These directions were given in the whole wild night with its driving rain, howl, hooting, and shrieks, and Major was startled now. That a hansom could be so completely and sufficiently absolutely without this crowning force, and yet Major was indeed on the left side of the bed, and Barjaud was on the other side, through the window, and Lolind was on the door. Jacques was lying on the floor, and Major was on the bed, and Barjaud

A Possible "Return From Elba."

Mr. Egan, U. S. Minister to Denmark, is still strong in the belief that Dr. Frederick Cook reached the north pole, and states that one-half of the people of Denmark also believe it. Mr. Egan was the first to meet Dr. Cook on his return from the north, and was with him most of the time during his sojourn in Denmark. The government and people showered honors upon the explorer, and scientific societies gave him unstinted recognition as the discoverer of the boreal center.

That those honors should come to Dr. Cook so spontaneously was due to the following facts: The American already had an enviable reputation as an explorer. He had been on the staff of Peary in previous Arctic expeditions, and had been officially spoken of by Peary as possessing high scientific attainments, and the necessary qualities of courage and constancy. His honor and probity of character had never been questioned.

In recognition of Danish courtesies Dr. Cook agreed to submit his records to the University of Copenhagen, which he did after reaching this country. He came home and was received as a conquering hero. His department was calm, modest and dignified. Then came Peary from the pole in a spasm of denunciation and vituperative abuse of his former associate, and in the midst of the controversy came the Mount McKinley episode, in which the secret of that mountain by Cook was challenged, dismissed and parried by Cook's accusers was charged and confessed. During all this Cook was in the better bell and working overtime on his records. The physical effects of his three years of hardship, coupled with the epidemic of bitter controversy, broke his once iron constitution, and he secretly took refuge in a sanitarium.

Then came the "scotch verdict" from Copenhagen. Cook had not reduced his data to the technical scientific perfection that the gages and reversed sliderule had set for their standard, and "not proven" was writ down in the records. Cook knew full well what this meant, with Peary and his suborned western Mt. McKinley adventure almost. The strain was too great for his physical endurance, and he disappointed. He was in Europe, Canada, and finally in South America, convalescing his fearful illness. His disappearance was taken as a confession of guilt, and his friends deserted him as they do when adversity comes. He could not, single handed and alone, fight a frenzied world. His country seem had transferred their worship to a new god; why should he resist? Already broken in health, he was not equal to the task of treeing the scouts. It was better that he should suffer martyrdom in obscurity than to throw himself into the maelstrom of popular prejudice. We believe that Dr. Cook will return from Etna, but that the tragic St. Helena culmination will fall of accomplishment.

We believe that Dr. Cook reached the pole, and that his records are as authentic as those of Peary, but that he made a mistake in not submitting them to a scientific jury of his country instead of to a faculty of foreign savants, took chilled, and wrapped in an impenetrable armor of technical conceits. Face was against Cook, and we believe that the odds of the gods will, in the end, grind out a full measure of justice to him.

"The Man on The Box."

When "The Man on The Box" comes to town, everyone is happy, for the people know they will see a good play, and when Trouble Hun, present the play, they can be additionally sure of seeing the best company obtainable, and so when "The Man on The Box" opens its engagement at the Charlevoix Theatre, Wednesday night, March 10th, the public will see an additional treat in that they will see the best company ever organized for this attractive play.

The entertainment has been rehearsed and is presented under the personal direction of the management, and no expense has been spared to make it a worthy one in every respect. The scenery has been painted by one of the best artists in the country, and everything possible has been done to make this the grandest tour of the company, one which will never be forgotten by users of the delightful evening spent by a discriminating public. See the old favorite characters played by clever people; laugh and be home happy. Tickets at Chapel's Monday morning.

Osborn's Record as Railroad Commissioner Not Open to Attack.

From the Sun News.

The Detroit News in desperation "to get something on Osborn" attempts to make an issue out of Chase Osborn's record as railroad commissioner under Governor Pingree. To a man with a political memory, this effort upon the part of newspaper which during Pingree's lifetime left no denunciation of Pingree unuttered, no brick unhurled, no charge of official misconduct unsaid, is, to a degree, preposterous and absurd. While the News was hurling its poisoned darts at the "gold man," seeking to obtain any to discredit him when he needed support most of all, Chase Osborn was Pingree's consistent friend and supporter. In a section of the state where Pingree was most actively antagonized, where his policies always found opposition, where friends were few and detractors many, Chase Osborn led the fight. His paper first of any in the state denounced Pingree's nomination and in the light for his election was ever in the van. Pingree found some of his most aggressive enemies in the upper peninsula but the people of Chippewa county, led by Chase Osborn, gave Pingree their votes and sent to the legislature a man judged to support the Pingree program.

When Pingree came to a separation of the political ways with Stewart Wessells, his railroad commissioner, for the most important post within his gift, he turned to Chase Osborn and three times proffered the appointment before it was accepted. Does that look as if Osborn was out of harmony with the "gold man?"

The News in its attack upon Osborn's record as railroad commissioner is careful to refrain from any mention of the fact that Chase Osborn, Pingree's railroad commissioner, was the first man in the state to force the reduction of railroad fares to two cents a mile. It was equally careful not to omit any reference to the policy of grade separation which Osborn initiated and enforced to the letter, thus saving scores of lives which might have been otherwise sacrificed through desire for larger financial returns upon the part of railroad corporations. It likewise overlooked the fact that until Osborn became railroad commissioner the laws governing the assessment of safe conditions on railroads were a dead letter, and that his solicitation of that office first made them effective and gave them force.

It is true that Chase Osborn honestly differed with his chief as to the best method of securing the payment of adequate taxes by the railroads, advocating an increase in the percentage of the specific tax upon earnings rather than a change to the ad valorem basis. He has since been frank enough and fearless enough to say that he has learned in the ten years which have intervened that Pingree was right. But if Osborn applied the adoption of the ad valorem system then for corporate taxation because of honest doubts of its efficiency, wherein does he differ from the News which lately demanded the abandonment of the ad valorem system of taxation upon another class of corporate property, and a return to the specific system?

The ultimate effect of this attempt to attack the record of Chase Osborn as railroad commissioner will redound to Osborn's benefit for it will serve to emphasize a record which is without reproach in its loyalty to the people's interests, and its thorough going insistence upon careful observance of the laws by the railroads of the state.

Rules of Sleep.

Those who think need, who do most brain work, require most sleep, and time "saved" from necessary sleep is infallibly destructive to mind, body and estate. Give yourself, your children, your servants—give all that are under you as the fullest amount of sleep they will take by compelling them to go to bed at some regular early hour, and to rise in the morning at the moment they awake, and within a reasonable time, with almost the regularity of the rising sun, will endowe the heads of men the moment enough to use the brains nearest for the wants of the system. This is the only safe and sufficient rule, and, as to the question how much sleep any one requires, each must be a rule for himself. Great nature will never fail to notify us of the observance of the requisitions she gives.—London Globe.

A Gloomy African Pool.

There is a pool in Africa of mysterious pool in the valley of the upper Kafue river, northwestern Rhodesia, which is considered full of fear in the country, and one comes to it quite suddenly, by little trips concealed by dense forest. There is a small native village near the pool, and the inhabitants have a superstitious dread of it. They refuse to drink the water or use it for any purpose whatever. Its all beside this still, pitch black pool of unknown depth, surrounded by bottomless walls in the heart of the tropical forest, which indeed is fitting if it is the breast of evil the most civilized man.—London Mail.

NURSERIES SHORT

Demand For Peach, Apple and Other Fruit Trees Exhausting Nursery Stocks.

Such has been the demand on the nurseries for peach trees for delivery this spring that the market has been stripped of stock. Not a nursery in Michigan has an unsold peach tree left. The same report comes from the big nurseries in the east. Practically the only stock left is some in southern nurseries but southern grown stock may not be hardy in the north, and for that reason it is not in demand.

"Our stock of peach trees was exhausted several weeks ago and I do not know anybody who has any left," said A. Heybor, of the Woodlawn Nursery company yesterday. "We have sold considerable stock for Kent county planting, but our heaviest sales have been in Mason and Manistee counties and some in Grand Traverse. We have not sold much south of Kent for the reason that these counties are already pretty well planted.

"There has been a great demand also for apples, and the supply of apple trees is getting very short," continued Mr. Heybor. "The greatest demand has been for the good old standbys, the Baldwins, Spies, Ganos, Wolf River, Wealthys, Wagners, King's Justices and Greenings. We have sold much of the stock for Kent county, but most of it goes north. We have sold many cherry, plum and pear trees, but we still have good stocks left, and do not anticipate any shortage in the supply. The same is true of grapes.

"Two of the orders we have taken for the spring delivery are especially interesting. One of the big lumbering companies at Boyne City has cleared up a large tract of its cut-over lands and will plant some cherry and apple trees. Another lumbering concern at Charlevoix is doing the same to the extent of 3,000 or 4,000 trees. If the trees prosper, and there is no reason why they should not, the lands can be cut up into farms and sold as improved property, and at substantial profit to the lumbering company."

WHERE THE BUREAU STANDS

The Position of the Western Michigan Development Bureau Regarding Good Lands.

In placing before the public the advantages which Western Michigan offers to the farmer and the fruit grower the bureau is working for the benefit of the district as a whole. Conditions in all the counties are so familiar that what is true of any county is more or less true of all the counties.

The bureau is not advertising the merits or demerits of any particular kind of land, or soil, in any part of this district—that is left to the owner—and its advice to the land seeker is exactly what honest men in any quarter of the world would give to him—that he should first determine what kind of soil he wants for the purpose he has in mind, should carefully investigate any land that may be offered to him in order to learn if it be suitable for his needs as regards soil, location and fruit respects, and should then buy the best he means will permit.

Even the best land in this district is actually "dirt cheap" when compared with land of equal intrinsic value anywhere else.

The bureau repudiates any responsibility for the sale of any and all persons who, for their own selfish interests, may be attempting to palm off upon ignorant and guileless purchasers lands of doubtful value claiming for the latter all the virtues of good lands, and sometimes making the price accordingly. Such persons are taking advantage of the publicity given to Western Michigan through the bureau's work to catch the kind of buyer who is ready to believe anything he may see in print; there are too many of that kind, and every possible means should be taken to protect them from imposition.

It needs no argument to show that the representation of any kind will certainly injure the good reputation of Western Michigan, and retard the forward movement that has so happily begun, and misrepresentation of land values is the worst and most dangerous of all.

What is needed to develop the wild lands of the district is certainly not a lot of disheartened settlers moving out of the country and warning all they meet not to come here but a lot of happy, contented settlers who will write to friends at their old homes, "Come on; this is the promised land!"

Far better to let a man go away without buying than allow him to be beguiled into making a purchase which he may bitterly repent. Some settlers will fail, of course—there are failures in every kind of business—but failure should not be a foregone conclusion.

Western Michigan's soil is like every other, any where; most of it is good, some indifferent, some doubtful, and some poor, and every man in the district who has its best interests at heart should, as far as he may, see that the land seeker be fully informed as to everything he should know in order to buy intelligently, and gets a square deal from the seller.

A SECOND MEETING.

The Earl of Stanhope and the Trusting Highwayman.

One night when the Earl of Stanhope was walking alone in the Kentish lanes a man jumped out of the hedge, leveled a pistol and demanded his purse.

"My good man, I have no money with me," said Lord Stanhope in his remarkably slow tones. The robber laid hands on his watch.

"No," Lord Stanhope went on "that watch you must not have. It was given to me by one I love. It is worth £100. If you will trust me, I will go back to Chevening and bring a £100 note and place it in the hollow of this tree I cannot have my watch."

The man did trust him. The earl did bring the note. Years after, Lord Stanhope was at a city dinner, and next to him sat a London alderman of great wealth, a man widely respected. He and the earl talked of inner things and found each congenially entertaining.

Next day Lord Stanhope received a letter, cut of which dropped a £100 note. "It was your money, forbidden to leave of this land," and the letter, "that starved me in life and enabled me to have the honor of sitting next to your lordship at dinner."

A strange story, but the Stanhopes are a strange race, and things happen to them that never did or could occur to other people.—London Spectator.

A TURKISH LEGEND.

The Red Rose Sprang From a Drop of Mahomet's Blood.

"A truly religious Turk looks upon the rose with great reverence," said a florist. "The rose is beyond question the prettiest flower that blooms, and is one of the flowers the Turks for many years before the conquest of Granada. There is a religious legend generally believed in throughout Turkey that the red rose sprang from a drop of the prophet Mohammed's blood. Everything beautiful is unique in sentiment in the Turkish mind, therefore, have great reverence for the flower and allow it to bloom and die untouched, except on state occasions and for the purpose of making rosewater.

"After the conquest by the Turks they would not worship in any church until the walls were cleansed and washed with rosewater and that profited by the blood of the prophet. It is used on the body for the same purpose.

"A Turk whose conscience is stung by some act or deed he has committed will offer and pay a reverence to the rose to appease the wrath of the prophet and Allah.

"With these ideas inculcated in him from youth, I would stock his grower to use the pretty flower strewn in the path of a bridal couple, thrown on the polls stage or tossed up in hundreds at a sweet reception or party to be crushed and spoiled in an evening."

Notes on Speed.

The maximum speed acquired by the average person in swimming comfortably is a little more than a second, while surmount in an eight-oared boat requires a speed of 10 feet 10 inches in a second. Skaters average from nine to ten yards a second, while a good horse covers six miles in an hour on a considerable length of time. The swift flight of a fly is about 10 feet a second, while the gazelle has shown measured speed of more than eighty feet a second, which would give it a speed of 4,800 feet in a minute if it could keep it up. The whole struck by a harpoon has been known to dive to than twice that speed for a minute, species of fishes known as the swordfish have been seen to run north after to northern Germany in less minutes than, making the distance in eleven hours.

Packing Apples, 1909, J. C. Howe Farm, Old Mission, Western Michigan.

Mr. Howe is a St. Louis, Missouri gentleman, who came to Western Michigan several years ago, because of the wonderful opportunities of developing a profitable business by growing of fruit. His orchard is one of the largest in Northern Michigan and the annual income from the same is greater than that of many of the smaller mercantile institutions throughout Western Michigan.

Do You Have

Headache

TAKE ONE OF THESE LITTLE TABLETS AND THE PAIN IS GONE.

"My first experience with Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills was a sample package handed me. They relieved the pain so promptly that I have never been without them since. I have given them to many who have had headache and they never failed to relieve them. I have suffered with neuralgia in my head, and the first one I took relieved me. They have cured one of neuralgia. I would not be without them."

LAND CRABS.

Queer Creatures That Roam in Fortuna Far From the Sea.

One of the commonest and the largest of the Christmas island land crabs is the small brown robber crab, which is found in most of the tropical islands of the Indian and Pacific oceans. It sometimes reaches a length of two feet and may measure seven inches across the back. Its colors are of a very gaudy description, the ground color being a bright red, upon which there are stripes of yellow, but in some cases a purplish hue is the prevailing tint.

The eyes are fixed on stalks which can be moved independently of one another, and there are two pairs of feelers, one long, the other short. The latter pair are continually jerked up and down. There is a pair of powerful claws, then several walking legs. In general appearance these animals are much more like rather stout lobsters than crabs, and one's first encounter with one of these creatures in the middle of a forest far from the sea is productive of much astonishment on both sides.

Another species of land crab common in Christmas island is a little bright red animal which in general shape is much like the common shore crab. This variety makes burrows in the ground, and in unique places the soil is honeycombed with hundreds of holes. The crabs spend most of their time collecting dead leaves, which they carry in their claws, holding them up over their heads and drag them into their burrows, into which they scuttle at the least alarm.—Pearson's Magazine.

A Mean Accusation.

The plump and pretty waitress was being coaxed by a youthful male admirer when a sedate middle aged man entered the dining room. To him she made prompt appeal.

"Is there anything on my face?" she demanded.

"Why, yes," was the reply, after a lengthy scrutiny. "There is some article on it."

"Oh, there is not!" she said in high dudgeon and flounced out of the room.—Lippincott's.

Bunched His Blunders.

"John," said Mrs. Jiggins, after the caller had gone away, "I wish you wouldn't have bunched your blunders so."

"What do you mean, Maria?" asked Mr. Jiggins.

"I didn't mind your telling her that you were ten years older than I, but you followed it up a minute later by letting it slip out that you were fifty, too."—Chicago Tribune.

21 PACKERS ARE INDICTED.

Six Leading Companies Also in Net of Grand Jury.

Twenty-one officials of the so-called meat trust and six of the leading packing companies of the country were indicted by the Hudson County grand jury in Jersey City. The indictments are the outcome of the exhaustive investigation which the grand jury has conducted for the last month into an alleged conspiracy to maintain the prices of food at an exorbitant figure. The men indicted are the leaders in the business circle that controls the country's output of meat. Some of them are many times millionaires and men whose names are known throughout the world. For the most part they are officials of Chicago, the center of the meat packing industry of the United States. The indicted men are:

J. Ogden Armour
J. Weston Arthur, junior
Arthur Meeker
Edward Morris
Louis F. Swift
Edward F. Swift
Edward Tilden
F. A. Genther
Thomas Wilson
Thos. J. Connors

The companies indicted are:

National Packing Company
Armour & Co.
Swift & Co.
Morris & Co.
Hammond Packing Company
Armour Packing Company
Swift Packing Company

The indictments charge the packers with "willfully, unlawfully and fraudulently destroying, restricting and limiting for their own excessive, immoderate and unlawful profits and gains, to the injury, defraud, prejudice, damage and oppression the public and people of Hudson county and county of Hudson." Evidences of conspiracy are contained in the indictment to the effect that the defendants agreed upon their output and exterminate prices and unjustly restricted the supply so that only a limited amount could reach the retail housewives in Jersey City. There were witnesses before the inquisitors, it was learned, who testified that there was a systematic method by means of which each company was to deal out only a limited number of curs.

KING SAYS "FIGHT LORDS."

"Undivided Authority on Finance Legislation" to Commons.

King Edward Monday afternoon opened the session of the parliament of his reign. In a momentous speech from the throne his majesty outlined the plan of the ministerial campaign against the House of Lords as follows:

"Recent experience has disclosed serious difficulties due to recurring differences of strong character between the two branches of the legislature. Proposals will be laid before you with all convenient speed to define the relations between the houses of parliament so as to secure the undivided authority of the House of Commons over finance and the predominant share in legislation. These measures, in the opinion of my advisers, will be found that this house should be so constituted and empowered as to enable it, partially in regard to proposed legislation the functions of initiation and revision and to act as proper safeguards of delay."

King Edward was accompanied by Queen Alexandra, and the state opening was marked by all the pomp and pageantry associated with these occasions since the accession of Edward II.

ROBBED BANK IS CLOSED

Former Harvard President Sues Banker in Texas Federal Court.

Following the discovery that the National City Bank of Cleveland, Texas, had been looted of $114,000, the doors of the institution were closed Monday afternoon by National Bank Examiner Ellis S. Pepper, acting in behalf of the comptroller of the currency. Six hours after this action had been taken as an embezzlement warrant issued for the arrest of George W. Coleman, the young bookkeeper of the bank, who was last heard from in Kansas City a few days ago. The institution is insolvent, the capital stock of $100,000 and the surplus having been wiped out by the defalcation. Eastern Banks were appointed receiver. Among the stockholders is Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard. Under the national banking laws the stockholders are liable to assessment if the assets are not sufficient to pay the creditors in full.

URGES YOUNGER NAVY.

Taft Asks Congress to Permit Officers' Earlier Promotion.

The need of young blood in the commands of the navy was the keynote of a special message which President Taft sent the day past to Congress urging legislation for improving the personnel of the fighting force and for remedying what the President termed "an abnormal condition, the result of past legislation."

Under conditions now existing, the President declared, the promotion of officers of the lower grades is sluggish and the average age of the officers of the navy and the country, and because now is every officer who retains his health is allowed to pass through the various grades and be retired as rear admiral the greater number of commanding officers have had inadequate experience now being trained in the command of battleships and armored cruisers and serve as flag officers on account of their seniority in rank and not after reaching that grade.

To remedy these conditions the President indorsed a bill which had been prepared by Secretary Meyer, which would promote officers to the grade of rear admiral at an average age of 54 in 35 years and retire them at the average age of 46 in 47. These changes, the President said, in his opinion would provide men young enough for the best success in a fleet engagement, although any change in the left they were a decided improvement, and he hoped that some other time it might be advisable to make even further reductions in the age.

U. S. LEADS WORLD IN TOBACCO.

Value of Exports from American Ports Since 1820 $616,000,000.

The United States leads the world as an exporter of tobacco and is the second markets of the world for imported tobacco, according to statistics of the Department of Commerce and Labor. Last year the United States supplied $41,000,000 in a total of approximately $100,000,000 worth of tobacco and tobacco manufactures which entered international markets. More than one billion dollars' worth of tobacco and its manufactures has passed through ports of the United States since 1820, the value of the exports in that period having aggregated $616,000,000 and the imports into the United States $380,000,000.

CONFESSES A BANK ROBBERY.

Suspect in Kansas Case Implicates Four others, One a Youth.

J. Bear, one of the two men in custody at Independence, Kan., charged with being implicated in the robbery of a bank at Fort Kent, Kan., reported that he was confessed to his participation in the affair. According to Bear's story, in his statement implicated four other men in the crime. One of the men, he said, is a railroad chauffeur who drove the robbers to the bank in a motor car, slowly in reserve, and the arrest of the others is expected hourly.

Bear said the robbery had been the result of the ringleaders in the planning for the crime, which he was in Oklahoma at the time of the robbery.

PHILADELPHIA UNIONS VOTE GENERAL STRIKE

Great Walkout in Sympathy with Car Forces Decided On by Labor Bodies.

FIERCE RIOTING IS RENEWED

Clergy and Priesthood Speak for Arbitration and Urge That Children Be Kept Off Streets.

Following a day of rioting and bloodshed during which two persons were killed and a score more or less injured, organized labor of Philadelphia, the other night decided to call a general strike of 120,000 men, the men Monday to sympathy with the striking street car employes.

Sympathetic action was decided upon at meetings of the Central Labor Union and the Building Trades Council, both bodies holding that the times of organized labor in the Quaker City was at stake and the time had come to deal a decisive blow. The building trades unions, which met in a separate hall from the central labor body, favored having the general strike called on Tuesday, and the more conservative action of the other body was taken only after six hours of hot debate.

The general strike, which every one fears will paralyze the city, was put off until Saturday in the hope that the Rapid Transit Company can in the meantime be brought to arbitrate the differences with its employes.

From almost every pulpit in the city Sunday the cry went up for the strike of the engine at the time, for arbitration and end the struggle which is resulting in the daily loss of human life and the destruction of thousands of dollars worth of property. In every Roman Catholic church a letter was read from Archbishop Ryan urging parents to keep their children off the streets during the trouble, as much of the rioting has been started by young boys.

For a day or month this time there had been less rioting and the order of the director of public safety that wagons and vehicles of all kinds must stop carrying passengers had resulted in never cars being run and in their being better protected. Citizens were beginning to breathe easier when the rioting broke out in more virulent form than on any day since the strike began.

Not since the month this time there had been less rioting and the order of the director of public safety that wagons and vehicles of all kinds must stop carrying passengers had resulted in never cars being run and in their being better protected. Citizens were beginning to breathe easier when the rioting broke out in more virulent form than on any day since the strike began.

As the large audience which was in attendance at the revival service conducted by Dr. Wilbur H. Chase, the Fremont Presbyterian Church the other evening was singing the opening song, "Rock of Ages, Let Us Hide Thee," the acetylene generators of the auditorium which, Aladdin-like, illuminate the song exploded. A stampede resulted, and one man jumped through a window. Seeing that some one might be injured in the rush, one might be injured in the rush, the Rev. Chase commanded the people to keep their seats, assuring them that the danger was over. The fire, it was badly burned about the hands, large pieces of the building burn been removed, and the audience manifested no disposition to leave.

FIRE RUSTS HOTEL GUESTS.

Adjoining Building in Lapeer Destroyed with $5,000 Loss.

A large frame building, which stood on the main street of Lapeer, Mich., was burned to the ground. John H. Smith, who lived on the upper floor, arose about 2 a. m. and fired the fire, everything being apparently all right. Two hours later he was awakened by smoke and had barely time to escape in his shirt and trousers, he said, he only collapsed. H. C. Kudner, owner of the building, had insured his office cars on the ground floor and only one of them was saved. The loss on the building, which was badly scorched, all the windows being broken and the greater roof lost, is $5,000, the loss is estimated at $5,000, partially covered by insurance.

TO ATTACK EXPRESS CONCERNS

Governor Warner Announces Complaints against Railroad Rates.

"I am going after the express companies in the interest of my administration," said Governor Fred M. Warner, "Michigan is discriminated against in the matter of express rates, and I intend making a stiff campaign to secure equitable rates, such as prevail in other states where there is more competition. While nothing has been said about it, the railroad commission some time ago carried on lavish expenditures, but the fight will be made in the vigorous campaign that is to be waged."

Sues for 15 Years' Board Bill.

Suit for unpaid board bills of $15 a month for the last fifteen years in Court by Norbert Boyer of Lake Linden, Mich., against Mrs. Ella Lake Linden. Joyal's wife died giving birth to a daughter twenty years ago, Boyer took the child, raised her to 19, when she married here twenty years ago and left her father. Boyer is now suing for her board and the expense of rearing her.

Fire at Hillsdale College.

Knowlton Hall, one of the main buildings at Hillsdale College, was burned the other day and only strenuous efforts saved other buildings. Loss $50,000.

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Chicago trade says:

"Some irregularity in operations is due to the holiday this week, severe storms in the west and disturbances in transportation, but there is sustained activity among the heavy producers and easier monetary conditions are reported by increasing bank deposits and a lower record of trading defaults, thus latter indicating an improved position of credits over recent reports.

"Prospects of better weather bring relief after the long winter to various interests and new demands in manufacturing and distribution become more varied, although the developments include none of striking importance as to contracts for future execution.

"Price tendencies for factory supplies to some extent are seen to be easier, and this encourages more optimism to plans for construction and other activities, but, however, greater conservatism where large financial commitments are involved and a more pronounced disposition to economize costs of production. Outputs of factories in the Chicago district steadily go ahead and this causes notable forwarding and an ample movement of raw and finished products.

"Bank clearings, $355,341,165, are 3.5 per cent over those of the corresponding week in 1909 and compare with $258,168,313 in 1908.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district number 21, as against 15 last week, 24 in 1909 and 25 in 1908. There with liabilities over $5,000 number 4, as against 2 last week, 6 in 1909 and 14 in 1908."

NEW YORK.

Trade reports are rather more irregular. Strong, cold weather over wide areas of country apparently has retarded the expansion of the spring holiday trade, but nevertheless the distribution has kept up well, in advance of last year in fact, and distinct gains in the volume of house trade are reported at many points. Retail trade has been restricted and this in turn operates against reorder trade in spring goods with jobbers. Indications continue active, but there is richer more evidence of friction in some lines, particularly in railroad labor.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with Feb. 24 were 254, as against 289 last week, 244 in the corresponding week of 1909, 311 in 1908, 194 in 1907 and 150 in 1906.—Bradstreet's.

NOTES OF CURRENT EVENTS

A small tornado, which passed over the country about Cairo, Ill., Tuesday morning, killed one and slightly injured a number of persons.

Ad Wolgast, former president of the Big Four road and a prominent Democrat, died at his home in Terre Haute, Ind., after a long illness.

The Calderaro Company, of coal mining goods by clerical candidates a bond offered was withdrawn from the Michigan Central and Detroit for the Michigan Central railroads and a portion of the village. The fire was superseded with gasoline and a supply of the fluid was sprayed in the building. The loss is placed at about $2,000.

EXPLOSION CAUSES PANIC.

Evangelist quells it by His Coolness and Resumes His Talk.

As the large audience which was in attendance at the revival service conducted by Dr. Wilbur H. Chase the Fremont Presbyterian Church the other evening was singing the opening song, "Rock of Ages, Let Us Hide Thee," the acetylene generators of the auditorium which, Aladdin-like, illuminate the song exploded. A stampede resulted, and one man jumped through a window. Seeing that some one might be injured in the rush, the Rev. Chase commanded the people to keep their seats, assuring them that the danger was over. The fire, it was badly burned about the hands, large pieces of the building burn been removed, and the audience manifested no disposition to leave.

FIRE RUSTS HOTEL GUESTS.

Adjoining Building in Lapeer Destroyed with $5,000 Loss.

A large frame building, which stood on the main street of Lapeer, Mich., was burned to the ground. John H. Smith, who lived on the upper floor, arose about 2 a. m. and fired the fire, everything being apparently all right. Two hours later he was awakened by smoke and had barely time to escape in his shirt and trousers, he said, he only collapsed. H. C. Kudner, owner of the building, had insured his office cars on the ground floor and only one of them was saved. The loss on the building, which was badly scorched, all the windows being broken and the greater roof lost, is $5,000, the loss is estimated at $5,000, partially covered by insurance.

TO ATTACK EXPRESS CONCERNS

Governor Warner Announces Complaints against Railroad Rates.

"I am going after the express companies in the interest of my administration," said Governor Fred M. Warner, "Michigan is discriminated against in the matter of express rates, and I intend making a stiff campaign to secure equitable rates, such as prevail in other states where there is more competition. While nothing has been said about it, the railroad commission some time ago carried on lavish expenditures, but the fight will be made in the vigorous campaign that is to be waged."

Sues for 15 Years' Board Bill.

Suit for unpaid board bills of $15 a month for the last fifteen years in Court by Norbert Boyer of Lake Linden, Mich., against Mrs. Ella Lake Linden. Joyal's wife died giving birth to a daughter twenty years ago, Boyer took the child, raised her to 19, when she married here twenty years ago and left her father. Boyer is now suing for her board and the expense of rearing her.

Fire at Hillsdale College.

Knowlton Hall, one of the main buildings at Hillsdale College, was burned the other day and only strenuous efforts saved other buildings. Loss $50,000.

Man and Wife Injured.

Bill Underwood suffered a fracture of the ankle by a fall on the fire. His wife, while making to summon aid, fell and fractured her right arm, besides sustaining serious internal injuries. Both are in a critical condition.

DECREASE IN COAL MINING.

Fewer Men, Fewer Mines, Smaller Output and Smaller Wages.

Decreased output, decreased wages, decreased number of mines in operation, decreased working days, decreased number of employes—general decrease, in fact, is the coal mining industry—are recorded for Michigan this year. The mining inspector's report has just been placed on file at the labor department. Thirty-one mines were, on the average, in operation during the year, against thirty-three last year. The average number of employes this year was 2,968, while last year it was 3,067. The average number of hours worked was the same for the two years, being 7.5. Wages have decreased a cents per day. Where last year there was an average daily wage of $3.65, this year it was just 3.60 cents. The aggregate wages paid during the entire year of 1909 amounted to $2,117,385.42 and last year the aggregate was $2,290,196.35. The total output of coal this year amounted to 1,753,928 tons, last year the output was 1,839,227 tons. The average cost of mining the coal this year was $2,995,573.07, a more pronounced disposition to economize costs of production. Outputs of factories in the Chicago district steadily go ahead and this causes notable forwarding and an ample movement of raw and finished products.

OPERATE ON SENATOR.

Wilson Aldes Smith, III with Appendicitis, Rallies Well.

Senator Williams Alden Smith of Michigan was operated upon the other day for appendicitis. It was discovered during the surgical operation that it was imperatively necessary and had it been delayed a few days the Senator's condition would have reached a crisis where it would have been difficult to save his life. Dr. Leslie Burr of Grand Rapids, his family physician, performed the operation, and Dr. L. T. Macdonald of Washington assisted. It was found that a gangrenous appendix was present. Senator Smith made a gallant rally and came from under the influence of the anesthetic in excellent shape.

ELOPES WITH WIFE'S MOTHER.

Deserted Woman is a Beauty, but Parent is Superior in Years.

In the prosecutor's office in Detroit a young wife told of the elopement of her husband and her own mother. Mrs. Bertha Warder, an unusually pretty brunette, with two dimples in her cheeks, told with calmness of the disappearance of her father and her husband. "It is surprising that your husband should run away and leave so pretty a woman as you," remarked Attorney Crane. "I know, but you don't know my mother," said the disloyal wife the young woman. The elopement occurred last August, and now the husband is determined to secure a separation from the missing man.

BRIEF STATE HAPPENINGS

Wayne's new public school building will be dedicated March 4.

An unsuccessful attempt was made to rob the postoffice in Midland.

Chris Dahn, a young farm hand, attempted suicide in the American Hotel in Ann Arbor. He turned on the gas. He will recover, doubtful.

William Reits, a former merchant of Three Rivers, was arrested at Calumet, Canada, and is charged with defrauding his creditors out of $20,000.

The Wayne Shipping Case Company has been organized and has filed articles of incorporation. The officers are: President, A. C. Stellwagen; Secretary, A. A. Snyder; Treasurer, A. Reiner.

During the coming summer, it is reported, the Celadaer Company will lay pipe to Quincy and furnish this village with gas for illuminating and fuel. The distance is about 6 miles.

Injured while trying to burglarize a residence, Clarence Brown, 19 years old, was shot by Policeman Walter Wolf, of Ann Arbor. The bullet took effect in Brown's back, causing partial paralysis.

In Port Huron a Circuit Court jury awarded George Keeley $5,000 damages against the City Electric Railway Company. Keeley, who is only 16 years old, lost his right leg in an accident nine years ago.

The home and paint shop of Duncan Van Gorder were completely destroyed by fire in Henderson. This is the second time within a few weeks that the village has been endangered by fire, and a vigilance committee has been at once organized. Van Zant's loss is about $2,500, covered by insurance.

The warehouse of the Bay City Sash and Door Company, with its contents, was burned Monday morning, the flames being so severe barrel hoops were burned off the face, hands and breast, and the fire which followed destroyed the plant of the Economy Hive Works, in Grand Rapids, with a loss of $5,000. The insurance on the stock, $2,000.

Edwin G. Shaw, of Newaygo, has been appointed a member of the board of control of the Michigan Soldiers' Home, in place of Dr. Jerome Lee. Dr. F. Allen, of Ypsilanti, H. H. Patten, of Lansing, and H. N. Loud, of Au Sable, have also been reappointed members of the State board of library commissioners.

According to the decision of Prof. H. L. Taft of Michigan Agricultural College, William Strong of Kalamazoo County has raised the most nearly perfect ear of corn over grown, the ear scoring 97 points. The highest score previously recorded was that made at the Omaha corn show, two years ago, when an ear produced by a western farmer scored 94 points.

In a runaway Elmer Snook, a black horse belonging to Frank Gates of his wagon, landing head first into a tree and was seriously injured about the head.

The Holland common council has indorsed the proposition that a referendum vote will be submitted at the coming municipal election. The vote will decide whether the Holland Gas Company shall be granted a franchise for a period of twenty years. The franchise is now in the hands of a committee.

In the Circuit Court in Centreville Frank Lyons, of Three Rivers, owner of a drug store, was found guilty of selling and local option law and fined $50 and costs. Ira Burns, of Parkville, for the same offense, was convicted and fined $50 and costs. Simon J. Sawyer, a Three Rivers hotel proprietor, was found guilty and sentenced by Judge Tuttle.

Ira W. Speer, charged with a statutory offense by Mrs. Lewis Miller, of Battle Creek Township, was released, Mrs. Miller and local officers having left for parts unknown.

FIRE IN GRAND RAPIDS.

Masonic Home is Destroyed—65 Inmates Rescued.

Fire of unknown origin destroyed the Masonic Home at East Grand Rapids. The loss will total close to $100,000. All of the sixty-eight inmates were gotten out with difficulty, but in safety. Several aged women who were ill in their rooms were carried from the burning structure. So far as can be ascertained there was no panic, however. The home is situated on the shores of Reed's Lake, and is of brick, three stories in height. Surrounding it are large lawns and fields, so that communication of the fire was not forced. The home is managed by a board chosen from the various Masonic grand bodies of the State. The blaze broke out in the boiler room.

Postal Spots Wire Combine.

The Western Union, the chief property of which is the Postal Telegraph Company, yesterday and announced formally their decision to sell telegraph holdings in the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, which they have held for years. In deference to public opinion, which has been strongly against the holding of stock in a company which has been in direct competition with the Western Union Telegraph Company, the holding of stock in the latter in the big wire combine and much had expected some action on the part of the Western Union Telegraph Company, but nothing was forthcoming until the last hour. The announcement says that the Western will continue to be free and independent.

THE FRUIT GROWERS

The Charlevoix Meeting a Big Success —Attendance Good.

The Charlevoix County Fruit Growers' Association met in the Van Pelt hall in Charlevoix in March 1, and was called to order by the President, W. P. Squier at 1:45 p. m. with about 75 fruit growers present.

The topic for this meeting was "Spraying and Trimming," but these present did not confine themselves to this subject very closely and many other points were discussed. The County Normal class was present and were all busy taking notes and the points brought out at this meeting will find their way to the school room later through these young people.

Wm. Straw says that he is always careful to trim off all bruised roots and that he cuts roots on a bevel so that the flat side of the root will lie on the ground. He likes the low topped trees on account of the less danger of damage by wind and also on account of the convenience in trimming, spraying and picking.

Mr. Andersen says that he always prune his young trees to three or at most four branches and leaves these not more than three or four inches long. He likes a medium heighth tree and would start the top from five to seven feet from the ground.

Mr. Wilmers says he trims so as to avoid crotches in trees.

The various points brought out by these gentlemen in regard to the form-ing of a top on a young tree prove that with care a top may be started at any desired heighth from the ground and that with proper care a symmetrical top may be formed on any young tree. Cut off all of one side of a young tree and the other side may be trained to a perpendicular position and a new and well shaped top may be formed.

Grafting was discussed to some extent, but the most important thing that was brought out was the fact that an otherwise worthless tree could be made valuable in this way.

Mr. Wilkinson believes in thorough pruning and says that he keeps an alley in every year and thus avoids the necessity of cutting large branches though he will cut a large one when necessary. A great deal of the pruning can be done by simply rubbing off buds when they are starting. He says that a young orchard should be carefully cultivated and that farmers should avoid straw crops as they always sap the trees and prevent a good growth. I may here again mention the fact that early cultivation is essential in order to get the wood grown in condition for winter and avoid winter killing.

The general discussion shifted from the tree to producing factory to the finished product.

Captain Flanagan, who sailed the lakes for years, and who is now employed by some Chicago parties in taking care of some farms near Ironton where they have purchased and purpose setting out a fruit farm, says that when he was sailing he was always loaded at Old Mission and some other points down the lake because he could get his load quickly in those places, thus giving another proof that the matter of a market for fruit is generally noticed when a community will produce a sufficient amount to entice shippers to the locality. He says that the Chicago parties propose to spend $5,000 in preparing their farm for fruit.

Mr. Mauch mentioned some things regarding the color of the fruit and says that the matter of low heading of trees will undoubtedly be proper coloring of the apples.

One very important point that was made regarding the selection of varieties was that when planting a commercial product, we must select the variety that the market demands. We may personally know from experience that a certain apple is an excellent keeper and that it has an excellent flavor but in nine cases out of ten it is the looks of an apple that will attract the buyer.

Mr. Lee, who has been in the business in Charlevoix spoke of this and mentioned several varieties that always are in demand among which were the snow, duchess, northern spy, Baldwin and pounce pippin. Says that there are other varieties that he personally likes better than some of these but that on account of their color or size or for some other reason, generally pertaining to the looks of the article, they are not in demand.

Farmers who contemplate setting orchards for commercial stock should look to the matter carefully and informthemselves as to the varieties that are most in demand. It may be that you do not like a certain apple but if there is a demand for it, it will pay to raise it whether we like to eat it or not.

Mr. Ward spoke of the Chicago exhibit and of the Michigan fruit there. He said that he found apples selling at three for ten cents, which were from Michigan, while the western apples were selling at four for ten cents. He said that the merchants never boomed the Michigan article on account of the fact that so many of them were culls and had to be handled at a loss while the western fruit was nearly all good. The best samples of our apples will beat the west in color, size and flavor, but they beat us because they raise their fruit right and it is all good.

Dr. Armstrong stirred things up in a plea for better methods and a more determined effort to raise a good article. He saw the exhibit in Chicago and insists that the best specimens of our apples can beat the best specimens that the west can produce and that there is no reason why our whole crop may not be as good as our best specimens and that it will be if we will make an effort to educate ourselves and will prepare to meet the little animal and vegetable enemies of the fruit industry.

Mr. Squiers mentioned the fact that the representative of a Chicago firm came here to look into the fruit matter after looking things over simply telegraphed the firm, "Stock out good" and gave as his reasons for so doing that the apples were not colored, were too small because they had not been thinned and that too many of them were wormy. Care and attention will remove all of these objections.

The matter of a nursery for northern Michigan was mentioned and should be seriously by the farmers. Northern grown trees are better than any others and can be had cheaper. Nurseries are out of trees now and buyers should be careful.

Selling, spraying and cultivating will be discussed at the next meeting which will be held in Boyne City April 1.

Respectfully submitted,
J. H. MILFORD, Sec'y.

The Potato.

Traverse City is recognized as the nerve center of the fruit and potato market of Northern Michigan. The record of that city, has the following to say about tubers:

"There is no question but that the potato situation is in a bad way. While other food products have been soaring, the potato has dropped until now the quotation upon the local market is but 18 cents. There is no money in potatoes at 18 cents a bushel for the grower or the buyer.

"It is claimed that there is an enormous over supply of potatoes in this country this year and that's what makes the slump in the market. On the other hand, with the high prices of meat and other food products, it seems that there would be more of a demand for the potato despite the enticement made by the Grand Rapids firm that potatoes are a staple and there is little change in the situation. Were people can't afford to eat meat, they must find a substitute and potatoes seem to be the most reasonable food to fall back upon because they are always in good, fitful supply.

"There is something wrong with the potato market whether it is an over supply, lack of demand or something else, and the growers are the ones who are getting the worst of it."

Another Hold Up.

We have just learned the fact of a wholesale robbery. On account of the lighting distribution in our city, where as the use of the new Mazda type of tungstens has never been thoroughly explained to the customers of electric current.

Why should you pay for something you do not get? When you monthly electric light bill comes in, you are charged for 16 watts on every 16 c p Carbon lamp which has done you no good or for which you have received no benefit. A 40 watt Mazda will not only give you more light but will consume but 40 watts, while an ordinary 16 c p Carbon lamp will consume 56 watts and give you less light.

TELEGRAPH LETTERS

Public May Send Fifty Words at Night at Usual Price of Ten Words During the Day.

Announcement is made by the Western Union Telegraph company that it will shortly be prepared to handle long night messages at the rates customarily charged for ten-word day messages.

It appears that the Western Union has a large unemployed mileage of wire at night which is not earning anything. These wires must be maintained in any event to take care of the regular day business, and it is apparently the idea of the new interests in the telegraph company to let the public have the benefit of them. The announcement states that "a special night letter service will be established as soon as practicable. The charge for this service will be the standard day rate for ten words, for the transmission of fifty words or less, and one-fifth of such standard day rate will be charged for each additional ten words or less."

To be taken at those rates "night letters" must be written in plain English language, that is to say, code words or communications written in foreign languages will not be accepted. The messages will be taken at any hour up to midnight and transmitted at the company's convenience during the night for delivery the following morning. For the present the new service will be confined to the Western Union offices in the United States. The tariffs charged for night letters are so low it is expected that the new service will be largely availed of by business concerns and others to quicken their correspondence by using the telegraph instead of the mails. A night letter sent by telegraph will reach its destination at the opening of business hours the following morning, thus saving as much as three or four days when long distances are involved.

High School Notes.

The staff have offered a pennant for the best original story for publication in the Annual.

There are over thirty graduates of the high school at present enrolled in higher institutions of learning, and the high school have every reason to be proud of their records.

Every representative of Charlevoix high school attending the University of Michigan this year passed the first semester's work without a single condition, some of them receiving high honors. Good reports also come from M. A. C.

The editorial staff of the Senior Annual are busy getting material together for publication. A complete alumni history is being written, and the alumni editor will be very glad for any information regarding the address or occupation of any of the alumni.

The spelling contests between Charlevoix and Boyne City have been contested with the following results: Charlevoix seniors have won five and tied for the sixth, juniors six, sophomores three, and freshmen six. Charlevoix high school as a whole won only three of the tilts. The sophomore class seems to be the cause of defeat for the high school.

Report cards were given out Tuesday for the first month of the second semester. The following pupils earned an average standing of 90 or above: Senior, Orville Beattie, 90.17; Raymond Bennett, 93.83; Hubert Paddock, 92.67; Lilah Shapton, 93.33; juniors, Charlie McGeagh, 92; sophomores, Marion Parsons, 90.8; freshmen, Ida Levinson, 93.4, Reva Lane, 90, Hazel Mills, 91, Agnes Worth, 93.4, Doris Stevenson, 93.83, Chas. Watkins, 92, Edna Shigley, 90.17, Enid Todd, 92.2, Marjorie Weaver, 91.4.

County Normal Notes.

Mary Berg, Louise Christensen, Margaret Watson and Thomas Scroggie began their work in practice teaching Monday, Feb. 28. Mary Berg is teaching fifth grade arithmetic; Louise Christensen, fifth grade geography, and Margaret Watson and Thomas Scroggie second grade reading.

The normal class accompanied by Miss Hines attended the meeting of the Fruit Growers' Association held at the Van Pelt hall Tuesday afternoon, March 1. Many profitable things were heard.

Mrs. Gilmartin and Mrs. Alcox visited the normal room Thursday afternoon, March 3.

The normal girls played a second game with the high school girls Friday evening, March 4, the score being 15 to 14 in favor of the high school.

No Safes Needed There.

An enterprising American undertook to establish a tomb in burglar-proof safes in the Mataza (seaside) district of Spain. There was nothing doing, for burglars are unknown. In that part of Spain.

Visit the Schools.

Report cards for grade pupils were given out Monday, March 6, and high school cards Tuesday, March 7. The report cards are given out the first Monday and Tuesday of each school month. Any work marked less than 85 is not considered satisfactory. A hard working, conscientious student should be able to get an average of 90 or above, if their previous preparation has been sufficient.

If the report card of any pupil does not show satisfactory work, the teachers are anxious and willing to talk the matter over with the pupil, and would be more than pleased to talk with the parent. It is not possible for the teachers to visit the homes, and the teacher feel for the sixth, juniors six, sophomores three, and freshmen six. Charlevoix high school as a whole won only three of the tilts. The sophomore class seems to be the cause of defeat for the high school.

Report cards were given out Tuesday for the first month of the second semester. The following pupils earned an average standing of 90 or above: Senior, Orville Beattie, 90.17, Raymond Bennett, 93.83, Hubert Paddock, 92.67, Lilah Shapton, 93.33; juniors, Charlie McGeagh, 92; sophomores, Marion Parsons, 90.8; freshmen, Ida Levinson, 93.4, Reva Lane, 90, Hazel Mills, 91, Agnes Worth, 93.4, Doris Stevenson, 93.83, Chas. Ancient Superstition.

Of domestic superstitions one of the most curious is that a nonsectarian grate fire may be made to burn by placing a poker, point upward, upon it. The usual explanation given is that, in some mysterious manner, it draws the fire up." The custom originated in the fact that the poker with the fire bars forms a cross, and the use of this cross was to exercise the evil spirits who were preventing the fire from burning.

—The meeting of the Charlevoix Historical Society will be postponed for one week.

—L. E. Benton was called to Bay City last Thursday by the death of a sister.

—Rev. H. A. Putnam preached at Brewster Congregational church in Detroit last Sunday.

—Capt. Wilbur desires us to state that he positively will not be a candidate for Mayor this spring.

—Chief Nordrum, of the Booth Fisheries Co., has been in Chicago and Manistique the past week.

—The young son of Capt. and Mrs. Peter McCafferty, of this city, died last Wednesday night, aged eighteen months.

—Regular communication of Charlevoix Lodge No. 282, F. & A. M. next Tuesday evening, March 22d. Full attendance desired.

—Mrs. Geo. Pappin and daughter returned home Friday from Detroit, where they spent two weeks visiting relatives.

—The Catholic ladies will give a supper at Cronin & Seidler's rooms on Thursday, March 17th, in honor of St. Patrick's Day. Come and bring your pocket book.

—Capt. Joe Shores has been appointed to the command of the good ship "Danny," of the Charlevoix fleet, and has already been assured of a good season of passengers and freight.

—The evangelistic services at the Congregational church still continue with Mr. Wallace as preacher. Mr. Wallace is a clear thinker and gives a very strong message in an interesting manner.

—Why not call and take advantage of our clubbing arrangement with the New York Tribune-Farmer, the best farmer's paper published? The two papers for two dollars is one of the best combinations now offered.

—We wish to call the attention of farmers to one fact. The SENTINEL will do auction advertising and printing as advantageously to the farmer and as well, as any paper in Northern Michigan. In case you need work of this kind call in and investigate. You will never know anything to be a fact until you look it up and satisfy yourself.

—Mrs. Carrie Hemstreet, Department Inspector of Mich. W. R. C. by request, visited our corps Thursday, March 10. We had initiation and a very profitable session, there being twenty-four members present. After closing there was a pot luck supper and a very merry, social hour. We are invited to visit the Indiana Corps some time in the near future. Remember Thursday, March 24th, is our next meeting.

—"Slaves of the Orient" is not a cheap priced play that any one can buy for 25c, it is a royalty bill owned and produced by the "Maud Henderson Stock Co." from whom Mrs. Jarvis obtained a copy at a big expense. This play is in manuscript only and has never been published, so undoubtedly you will never have the opportunity of seeing it again, as the company who play it travel through the west exclusively. The wardrobe is pretty and rich. Songs catchy and lots of them and the plot is good and very interesting. Come on March 22nd and see for yourself. March 22nd at Charlevoix Theatre.

—The local option folks in Antrim county are certainly making things warm.

—Mr. Edwin Shannon, of Bay City, has been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Frank Berge the past few days.

—Mr. and Mrs. McCafferty wish us to thank their friends for their kind assistance during the sickness and death of their baby.

—There will be a oyster supper at Barnard M. E. church Tuesday evening, March 22. Good program. All are cordially invited.

—New ads this week.—S. Orlowski & Son, J. L. Crane, M. A. Levinson, S. M. See & Sons, L. Lesby, Mrs. Atchison, Charlevoix Millinery Co.

—W. W. Washburn Jr., secretary and treasurer of the Gladwin & Warren Piano Co., of Detroit, spent last week Sunday with his parents in this city.

—The Beaver Island mail carriers have made their schedule of three trips per week. The ice is yet strong. Mail left St. James for Cross Village Wednesday morning 16th.

—Joe Shores is home again from his winter's lumbering campaign at Horton's Bay for the Charlevoix Lumber Co. Two million feet of hardwood, log measure, was the output. This cleans up the company's holdings in that locality.

—Bert Beaudoin, of the well known contractors and lumber manufacturers, has bought and installed a $500 ice cream manufacturing plant at his place. The plant embraces all necessary modern appliances, with electric motive power.

—In renewing his subscription to the Sentinel, Geo. S. Cooper writes us from Clarksville, Tenn., as follows: "I certainly enjoy reading at forty years ago, yet I came to Charlevoix the week in 1867. I read the first SENTINEL that was printed, and nearly every one since, but don't expect to read the last, for I hope it will outlive both you and me."

—About four years ago the spirit moved Charles E. See to have his vermiform appendix removed. The operation and recovery from its effects was all that could be desired, but evidently Charley was curious, and recently the pieces from whence came the rebellious extra member began to kick at being deprived of its tenant, and a resultant bad condition rendered another operation necessary, which was made one day last week. The patient is doing well, but will be confined to the house for some time yet. Moral—Be good.

—A petition is being circulated asking the common council to submit to a popular vote the question of discontinuing the board of public works. Inasmuch as the president of that body and the mayor both favor the proposition, there may be merit in it. These gentlemen hold that the board of public works is a needless municipal appurtenance, and that its work can as well be done by the council. The proposition will doubtless be submitted, and we probably carry. But it is an altogether unique spectacle—Pete Cinquetti, president of the board, agitating a movement to throw himself out of office. We wouldn't have thunk it.

—T. A. Baker, general superintendent of the anti-saloon league of American, says that in 1908 there was a net decrease of more than 15,000 saloons in the country; that about 11,000 were closed out of existence by the use of local option laws. Since Jan. 1, 1909, the temperance forces have been closing saloons at the rate of 40 a day and from 140 to 150 breweries had been compelled to shut down and go out of business in the last 18 months. Nearly 600 of the 800 little distilleries that existed in almost every township in Virginia have been abolished in the last few years, and less than 100 are now in existence. He declares that at the present time 41,000,000 of the population of the United States are living in prohibition territory and that 75 per cent of the area is under prohibition.

MRS. LILLIAN HINES LAMMERS

Lady Well Known in Charlevoix Dies at Her West Virginia Home.

We take the following from a Bramwell, (W. Va.,) paper concerning the death of Mrs. Lillian Hines Lammers, a sister of Frank G. Hines, of this city:

Lillian Hines was born June 6, 1870, and spent most of her girlhood days in this city. She was married to Wm. A. Lammers on December 26, 1894. The first years of their married life were spent in Columbus, O., but later they moved to Bramwell, W. Va., where they have since resided. She was the daughter of Edwin Hines, who preceded her some years ago to the better land. Her mother and sister, also a brother of Charlevoix, Michigan, survive. The home life of Mr. and Mrs. Lammers was an ideal one and her presence will be greatly missed. Her every thought was for her loved ones. She was ever ready to speak a cheery word to friends and acquaintances.

Their being no Baptist church in Bramwell she devoted herself to the work of the Presbyterian church. Her loss, being a bright and capable woman, she will be greatly missed.

The funeral services will be held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Lammers on East seventh street at 10 a. m. Tuesday. Rev. Meyer will conduct the funeral services and interment will be at Greenlawn.

Again the angel of death has been in our midst and taken from us Lillian, wife of William A. Lammers. She had been ill since last fall and had spent the winter at Colorado Springs, but the change of climate proving to be of no benefit her husband brought her to Portsmouth to the home of his parents where she remained a week. Failing rapidly she was taken to the Hempstead hospital and a specialist called from Cincinnati, who pronounced her case hopeless.

All that human power could do was done, but without avail, and early sunday morning she left the loved ones here to join those on the other shore. She was a loving wife and devoted mother and our heartfelt sympathy goes out to the stricken husband and the dear little children who are left motherless.

The end came sooner than was expected and while little Billy and Margaret, the younger children, were here before her death the shock will be greater to the elder children, Lois and Lucile, who with Mrs. Lammers' mother and sister will arrive today from Bramwell, W. Va.

Theatre Changes Hands.

Last week A. F. Young leased the Majestic Vaudette Theatre to W. C. Campbell, a practical vaudette manager of Cadillac.

It is the intention of Mr. Campbell to install an entire new set of scenery, change and improve the stage, and otherwise improve the place.

The theatre will be opened the night of April 4th with moving pictures and a good vaudeville, and continue the high entertainments of high class. More extended announcement later.

—Mrs. James Blodgett, who has been in Detroit with her daughter for some time, is here for a two weeks stay.

—Remember Tuesday, March 22, is the date when J. Leahy, the optician will be at Baker's Inn. He will remain two days. Fitting children's eyes a specialty.

—Please call at the Emrey Clothing store to examine and purchase tickets on the fine worsted quilt, embroidery pillow and woven rug which the Royal Neighbors have prepared for raffle.

—D. C. Sweltzer, of Sebawaing, who has a shingle mill near the head of Beaver Island, is here with his family. A house has been rented, and the family will make its home here for the summer and fall. Mr. Sweltzer will go to the Island by first boat to resume operations. He has a million shingles on his dock, of last year's cut, awaiting shipment.

—We take the following from a Dover, (N. H.) paper: "The inaugural ceremonies of Dover's boy city, officially known as Boyville, took place at the City opera house this evening in the presence of a large gathering. Mayor George J. Foster, president of the Boy's Welfare association, presided. On the stage sat the speakers and members of the welfare association, which had as its most distinguished guest the well known promoter of boys' clubs, Willis Brown, formerly judge of the juvenile court of Salt Lake City, whose lecture here in November before the Dover women's club led to the starting of Boyville."

ANOTHER BEE IN HIS BONNET

George VanPelt Has Hatched Out Another Plan for Agricultural Improvement.

George H. Van Pelt of this city, temporarily residing in Chicago, is out again after barrels. Of these he already has a sufficiency, but Van Pelt never knows when he has enough.

George's eagle eye was attracted to an article in a recent issue of the Outlook, regarding the presentation of diplomas of merit to four southern boys by Secretary James Wilson, of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, at Washington. These four boys are members of the Boys' Corn Clubs carried on by Dr. Seaman A. Knapp, an official of the department. The movement proceeds upon a few simple principles with a few plain objects in view. Dr Knapp believes that it is worth while to get a boy to form a good purpose and to work persistently toward its accomplishment. The plan briefly outlined in this: Each boy agrees to plant and cultivate an acre of corn, generally on land furnished by his father. Advice as to methods of cultivation, selection of seed and planting, is furnished by the department at Washington. All this must be done strictly according to rules laid down. Where there is a county fair, the contest is held at the fair, when also the county seat on a day selected in the fall.

This is an age of Boy Movements, in various directions. The boys of today are the men of the future in all the walks of life. Likewise it is an age of expanding interest in agricultural pursuits, and the fact is steadily fastening itself upon the minds of the people that the farm is in an ever increasing degree the greatest source of the nation's temporal progress.

True to his instincts, Mr. Van Pelt grasps all this, and sees a field wherein he can not only nurture a love for the farm in the hearts of the boys but contribute a portion of his philanthropic spirit for the benefit of posterity.

His ambition is, locally applied, to organize in this vicinity a club of ten or more boys along the lines given above. He would have them prepare the ground and study up on the proposition this coming season, and he authorizes the SENTINEL to announce that he will give $25 to the boy who raises the best acre of corn in 1911. As an adjunct to the corn contest he wishes each boy to plant an acre in the planting of an orchard of apple trees, and the one who has the best looking orchard in 1916 he will give $50. In order to test the merit of their money he will deposit the money as soon as a club of ten or more boys is formed and leave it at the bank so they can get it.

We know of no more laudible undertaking, nor one that gives promise of more fruitful returns, than this of Mr. Van Pelt. It has in it much that is worthy of serious consideration by parents. The successful working out of the plan will serve two beneficent purposes. It will instill in the boy's mind a spirit of healthful rivalry, and at the same time be educational. It will grow by what it feeds upon and expand in its influence. It deserves, it will be of permanent benefit to farm property.

We hope to see the boys take this matter up at once.

That Man Milford.

That man Milford is a valuable man to have in the family.

He is not only an able superintendent of schools, with an accent on the able, but he is always mixed up with about everything that affects the interests of the people of Charlevoix county, and in such a way that the people get the benefit of his versatile talent.

He was evidently a farmer's son, as he is generally present when the farmers gather to discuss matters of general agricultural interest, and he talks and writes as one who knows all about the subject.

He is secretary of the Charlevoix Fruit Growers's association, and what he don't know about fruit is not worth knowing. He knows trigonometry, algebra, grammar, percentage and cube root, and we presume he can figure out the fourth dimension. But he also knows how to trim an apple tree or pull stumps.

We believe Milford is more different kinds of a useful man than any man in the county, barring none. We believe Milford could run a normal school, an agricultural college or a newspaper.

Milford is a dandy.

East Jordan Hotel Burned.

Following closely on the heels of the Boyne City hotel fire comes a similar disaster at East Jordan.

The Hotel Bricks, at that place, was totally destroyed by fire at four o'clock Monday morning. A defective chimney is supposed to have been the cause.

Loss $6,000; partially insured.

FROM GEORGE VAN PELT

That Everlasting Chicago-Norwood-Charlevoix Hustler Writes About Northern Michigan Farmers.

CHICAGO, March 12, 1910.

MY DEAR SENTINEL:

Through Mr. Howe, I was invited to lunch with the Managers of the Land and Fruit Exhibition to be held in Chicago next November and December, and really was very much surprised to see the interest that was manifested in this matter.

The Tribune people expended $125,000 last year, and expect to spend $200,000 more this year, making it the greatest exhibit that has ever been known in the world of its kind, and when the Tribune undertakes to do a thing, it is "did and done to the Queen's taste."

I met a number of Michigan men there, and it was certainly very enjoyable, and what I would like, would be to see Emmet, Antrim and Charlevoix counties unite and just beat the world this year on fruit. They could do it if they only feel so disposed, but when a man sets out an orchard and lets it go to grass, weeds, etc., as so many of them do and see the fruit that is produced from an orchard that has about only no care, and imagine what it could do if it were properly cared for, really makes a man feel that we do not really appreciate the blessings bestowed upon us by an All Wise Creator.

I hear many pleasant, strong words of praise for the great work done here by both Mr. Howe and Mr. Dayton. At my request, Mr. Howe gave a little talk to the Shoe and Leather Club, as did also a representative from one of the western states.

Both of them brought samples of their fruit, and the verdict was strong and almost unanimous that the Michigan apples not only had the flavor, but the keeping qualities as well, and they were the praise of all who ate them.

The fruit growers of the United States cannot give the Chicago Tribune too much credit for establishing this Land and Fruit Exhibit. It will be the means of making millions and millions of dollars for our country.

Some time during this season, you can expect to see a lot of hide men (by that, I mean they will all have their hides on) and some shoe men (well shod) with those of kindred industries, who will take your town by storm.

While you so kindly advertised for me last year the lands that were for sale, giving me descriptions of same, as I expected, a brother of one of my friends to come and look over these farms, yet it did not materialize. The fact that he was awakened this party to the fact that Northern Michigan is the proper place for him to locate, although he had certainly decided on settle in Southern Michigan, self these same good friends who wrote me regarding their property last year will be more particular this year, giving me the number of acres, number cleared, number standing timber, number of cut over but untilled acres, size of houses and barns, number of streams of water running thro' the farm, should there be any, in fact, give an accurate description clearly and plainly of just what you have for sale in order to induce buyers to come. I do not believe that anything som

(CHAPTER XII.—Continued.)

When rolling home after this interesting conversation, the Major could not but admit to himself that Ikbel had brightened up wonderfully in his handiness since the days when charge of the case. The man was, it appeared, not even jealous, yet in the present instance he displayed more confidence of resource than Jim would have given him credit for. The theory of the drug being now in full flow of operation, the Major determined to see if anything could be discovered likely to support this view of the matter. He will bear in mind, he thought, as he drove, that it was incredible that an old servant of many years' standing should turn traitor all at once, but he thought it possible that some one might have taken him by surprise and drugged him. But as the window was closed, the person in question must have been concealed in the room. How Jim's train of thought became confused.

Angered was far from the condition of connected thought, or coherent words. He found himself on tossed and proper bed with bright eyes, burning skin, and babbling tongue. His bed was soaked in lotions, and the household who watched beside him had frequently to replace the clothes he threw off in his violent uneasiness. This person was a sickly, fair-haired creature, who was strongly attached to Jagsticb, and it was her love for him that made her consent to be present in lock-other him, and that chabged to his bedside when he grew ill. It was her fear that Ikbel had been laid there overnight and was coming again to do her offensive, and that it was nothing to be done until the delirium had exhausted itself.

"Ay," thought Jen, as he stood by the bed, not quite the man of the little willow regaining his senses, so with much less truth.

He bent down to replace the bedclothes which the sick man had thrown off, and as he did so, a faint perfume, lovely and rich, struck his nostrils. He seemed to come from the bunkmen of the bedstead, and on looking round he found, for a closer inspection, Jen saw that some of those same of that from this the rest. The fabric was comfortable, and with a store which made the bread turn to him which Jen real-lized that it was a woman's handkerchief.

"How come this here?" he asked the housekeeper, pointing to the article in Hines.

"Oh, that was on the first night, sir," she hastened to explain. "It was the night before Master Jim came home where he fell sick. The doctor, sir, says as well as I do, it was the fever."

A curtain interposed between the bend of the patient and the light of the window. Jen drew aside the curtain, lightly removed the outside wrappings of the second. The housekeeper looked on horror, for she did not dare to suspect her master of a crime which she felt sure that he was doing wrong. But Jen was broken in upon by the housekeeper behoving; and in a few minutes he had the outside bandages removed, leaving the handkerchief discovered with a ghastly thing over the wound. Who did's ingers he lightly touched the fine cambric. In one corner stood the initials "M. D."

"M. D?" said the Major to himself. "Margaret Dallas, the mother of Jessie-Hella. How did her handkerchief get into the room on that night? And the perfume?"

It struck his sense of smell with a hatred not to be mistaken. Hatred. Nothing is so strong to waken memory as odor, and in less than half a minute the mind of the Major leaped back to where he had seen it before. It was the perfume of the dried poison of the devil-stick.

CHAPTER XIII.

That the handkerchief of Mrs. Dallas should be found round the head of Edward was evidence that that it should be perfumed with the deadly scent much impressed the detectives, and stranger still. Had Mrs. Dallas found the scent of drug? Had Mrs. Dallas perfumed the handkerchief with its sense poison, and Mrs. Dallas drugged or supplied Jaggard on that fatal night by means of that saturated handkerchief? These were the vital questions which presented themselves to the puzzled Major.

And here the personality of Dr. Ryland needed into the affair. It was Ryland who had bound up the wound with the handkerchief in question, and had forbidden its removal. The question was had he received it from Mrs. Dallas, or had he found it on that night by the side of the unconscious man? If the first, Mrs. Dallas must be or prefumed to possess of the poison, and Ryland, knowing that it was so impregnated, must have used it advisedly as a bandage. If the second, Mrs. Dallas must have been in the room of the child in question, and have met the handkerchief to render Jaggard insensible. And in either case, is the Major very reasonable conclusion Mrs. Dallas must be in possession of the devil-stick. Otherwise, how could she have obtained the deadly scent?

"And yet, thought Jen, as he stood by the bed, or just the most fine. If he sites without regaining his senses, so with much less truth.

He bent down to replace the bedclothes which the sick man had thrown off, and as he did so, a faint perfume, lovely and rich, struck his nostrils. He seemed to come from the bunkmen of the bedstead, and on looking round for a closer inspection, Jen saw that some of those same of that from this the rest. Montgomery Out of the Race.

Judge Montgomery, chief justice of the Michigan supreme court, and candidate for governor, has been appointed and confirmed as presiding judge of the new U. S. customs court. This he voiced his resignation as justice and his withdrawal from the gubernatorial race, leaving a vacancy on the supreme bench which must be filled by appointment. The effect of all this upon the gubernatorial situation is just now made secondary to the supreme court justiceship. Two circuit judges are in the field for the appointment—Sessions of Muskegon and Perkins of Grand Rapids, and the friends of both candidates are making it warm for the governor.

Judge Montgomery's elimination from the situation changes the course from a four-phase contest to a triangular fight.

There is much speculation as to which of the three remaining candidates will gather the greatest number of the Most-gamey votes at the primaries. It is a hard question to answer this early in the campaign. Doubtless Mr. Musselman will gain strength in Kent county and its neighboring shires, but there are those who predict a corresponding gain for the other two candidates in other sections of the state. It would seem, at first glance, that Osborn will profit mostly, but Mr. Kelly and his friends may think differently.

Mean while Mr. Osborn is making a vigorous and clean campaign, and, in our opinion, has the best of the situation up to date.

What Wong Has Cannon Done?

It is plainly manifest that very much of the prejudice against Speaker Cannon and the prejudice that exists among the people, is without just cause. The reason held is the speaker's interpretation and enforcement of the House rules. In this he is charged with autocratic exercise of power. He is characterized as a czar and a tyrant, and the lumpen clamor has been accepted by a large percentage of republican constituency, backed up by traditional democratic and mugwump encouragement, as a popular movement against absolutism.

Speaker Tom Reed was the first to give a common sense interpretation to the House rules when he counted a quorum in their seats, who were "present but not voting." He was the first to be called a czar and tyrant, But he was right, and the party which so bitterly denounced him, afterward when it came into power, crammed the same medicine down the throats of the republicans, with Crisp as speaker.

The House makes its own rules, but there malcontents and unfaithfulcobbles even in congress. If the numerous should again obtain control of the House another czar would ascend the throne to wield the scepter according to his own sweet will.

Wiggins has Uncle Joe aimed!

A Suicidal Policy.

Congress has kicked the ship subsidy bill down the back stairs and the American farmer and manufacturer will continue to pay the freight on products to foreign lands in foreign-built ships. It is a foolish policy, and one which, if we continue to follow it, will not only cost us billions annually, but place our foot gold into the coffers of foreign ship-owners. The American flag is almost a stranger on the high seas, and we are compelled to see real for our own navy carried about in alien bottoms.

The American people easily shy at a scarecrow, and the wordy oratory and cranks spame whenever it is spoken in the halls of congress, not be cause senators and congressmen are not wise to the disgraceful facts, but because they are, in most cases, afraid to go home and face their constituencies if they vote for one.

There is not a maritime nation in the world that does not subsidize its merchant marine, and the commercial supremacy of Great Britain on the sea is due solely to her wise policy in this direction. With evidence so abundant and so manifest, it is indeed strange that we should continue to follow this mistaken policy, that finds its source in blind prejudice.

JUDGE WILLIS BROWN

The Father of Boy City Strikes Back at His Traducers—Motives of Spite and Jealousy Behind the Attack on Him.

Envious of his success in the field of philanthropic effort, and jealous to a degree that disclosed a spirit of cowardly malice, certain individuals with whom Judge Brown was formerly indirectly associated have sought to discredit him and his work by misrepresentation and garbled letters. Judge Brown looks you squarely in the eye and asserts that his record is clear, and he courts the most rigid investigation. As a matter of fact, there is nothing to investigate but the specious vaporings of the little coterie of whom we speak. We are in receipt of the following letter from Judge Brown:

Boston, Mass., March 6th.
My Dear Mr. Smith:

I am in receipt of an article published in the SENTINEL of March 3, and I want to express to you my appreciation of your kind words. I am indeed sorry that any statement should have been made connecting me with Beulah House. I cannot conceive how anyone in the least familiar with my work, plans and income would for one moment have the remotest idea that I would consider the proposition.

As for the matter of the attack on me by papers in Northern Michigan, in a spirit of hindering the progress of Boy City, it is deplorable indeed, especially that a spirit of rivalry should exist to the extent of indulging in personalities. The enclosed clippings will perhaps explain to you some things that happen in this New England country, where come people dislike mightily to find out that they are no always absolutely correct.

Inasmuch as you quote three of the charges published in the Traverse City Eagle, you will permit me to give you the answers. It is because of the absolute silliness of the charges that I have thus far ignored them. I had no thought that in Michigan, where these things were threshed out long ago, they would again appear.

With certain elements in a Mormon country, (and many Mormons were my friends), there were certain conditions which I was compelled to attack. By so doing I made enemies, in the same manner that Judge Lindsay, of Denver, has made enemies. The difference in tween Judge Lindsay and myself is that he got after his enemies first with publicity, while mine got after me first. Life is too short to fight, mines, as a result, great good comes out of it. see nothing in a personal fight.

If there is the least suggestion in Charlevoix or elsewhere that Boy City is not conducted fairly, or that in any connection I may have with it there is the least misrepresentation, untruthful news or dishonesty, then there will be no more Boy Cities. We stand for "Play the game fairly" as you know. On the other hand, if false statements are published which hinder the progress of Boy City or damage my personal or official standing, the game making the statements will be held legally responsible. I will not permit anyone to play fast and loose with my honor. It is all I have in this world, and it is mighty precious to me. As to the three particular charges: First, that one of my decisions was reversed by a higher court.

The decisions of any other judge ever reversed by a higher court? The fact is that this was incidental. The decision referred to absolutely declared constitutional Judge Brown's construction of the equity foundation of the Salt Lake court, making it fixed and permanent.

Under state of Jan. 20, 1910, Judge Geo. D. Armstrong, of the District Court, ever, in answer to a New Judge, said in reply about Judge Brown's plans, as follows: "Judge Brown was appointed Judge of the Juvenile Court of Salt Lake City. He established the court and also a Boy's Home and organized the Juvenile Land which was very successful. I believe him to be one of the most enthusiastic lovers of boys I ever met. His work in our midst had been continued by the establishment of State Juvenile District Courts, which with its probation system extends over the entire state and is doing a great deal of good. I believe the ideas he has, if carried out by men of good judgment who are lovers of boys, will be a great benefit to any community adopting them."

The second charge is that the court was reversed in another court, which indeed, and that Judge Brown failed in his efforts to be appointed judge of the new court.

Hon. William Hanson, county attorney at the time the new law went into effect, makes the following statement: "Judge Brown was the author of the new juvenile court law, and he fought for its passage, although he knew at the time that it would be instrumental in necessarily abolishing all offices existing under the old law. Another bill was introduced but not reported from the committee. If it had not been for Judge Brown we could not have had any juvenile court in Utah." The above letter from Judge Armstrong bears this out.

Third charge, that he is not truthful, in that he represented himself as judge of the Salt Lake court after he ceased to fill that position." The basis of this charge is a letter written by Roger Baldwin, chief probation officer of the St. Louis juvenile court, to Boston parties, as follows: "All the juvenile court workers of St. Louis are willing to state that Judge Brown made the statement both public and privately that he was judge of the Salt Lake juvenile court from Jan. to April 1907, when he first was in St. Louis. I called up this morning Mr. E. M. Grossman, attorney of the Board of Education, and Prof. James E. Swift, of Washington University, both of whom saw a great deal of Judge Brown when he was here, and they both state that he distinctly announced on several occasions that he was judge of the juvenile court, permitting himself to be introduced as such at public gatherings."

Judge Brown was judge of the court at the time mentioned by Mr. Baldwin. The trouble is that Mr. Baldwin and not Judge Brown makes a misstatement. Every one of the charges made by these people have several times been met and refuted, and I did not expect to have to do it again. Although these things are annoying, they do not worry me, because justice and right always prevails in the end.

Things look pretty good for Boy City, all things that are right always come out on top. I want you to know that I am always mindful of your encouragement for our work, and that I am glad to have you for a friend.

Respectfully yours,
WILLIS BROWN.

Important Crop.

There are indications which show that growing alfalfa is to be a much more important industry in northern Michigan in the future than it is at present. For this reason, the remarks of R. S. Shaw, director of the experiment station connected with the Michigan agricultural college are of exceptional interest.

"In selecting a suitable site for alfalfa growing avoid the low-lying wet cold lands with water level near or than five or six feet of the surface. Also avoid high, wet lands, such as sleepy hillsides. It is desirable as far as practicable, to grow alfalfa on lands not suited to cereal crop productions, such as the lighter, sandy and gravelly areas and high hills and ridges; for there is a possibility of utilizing these lands in this way while other crops may not be profitable. Alfalfa should be regarded as a permanent crop too valuable to use in a short rotation to be plowed under after two or three years in the same manner as clover. Where clover succeeds well and the crop rotation is a short one it should be used.

"In general the most suitable alfalfa soils are those of the deep, rich loamy or sandy loam types. Muck soils do not seem to be satisfactory. The results from clay soils seems to be variable.

"Alfalfa can be grown quite successfully on sandy and gravelly soils, even though these soils are lacking in humus and contain elements of plant food. The chief difficulty in connection with these soils to get the alfalfa well started, but when once started on these conditions the crops will do better than any cereal or grass crop that could be used."

THE New Tungsten lamps, which we are handling, can be used in any position, up, down, or at an angle. The method of supporting the filament automatically takes care of the expansion and contraction. The filament cannot sag. The small bulb enables the lamp to be used in all kinds of globes. The life of the New Type Tungsten is from 800-1,000 hours. The following table shows you the saving by their use. This table is based upon the ordinary voltage of 5 rooms with six 8 c p and 16 16 c p lamps burning two hours per day for thirty days. Six eight c p of 32 w each will consume eleven thousand five hundred and twenty watts per month. Ten sixteen c p lamps of 55 w, per lamp will consume 33,600 watts per month. Making a total of 45,120 w costing 10 cents per thousand makes your bill $4.51 whereas by burning 6-25 w Tungstens which consume 2,000 w and 10-40 w Tungstens consuming 24,000 watts, making a total of 32,000 w and your bill only amounting to $3.20. You not only have a saving of $1.30 per month but you are receiving more and better light. To the consumers of current and prospective consumers, we shall be glad to prove these facts by giving you a practical demonstration. MICHIGAN THE BEST EVER Chicago Man Calls It the Land of Eden on West Shore.

Mr John Robinson, 1647 North Oakley avenue, Chicago, under date of Feb. 27, wrote the following open letter to the editor of the Manistee Daily News:

"I agree with the man in Spokane, Wash., who said that Michigan beats Washington for fruit and vegetables. I have traveled all over the west and located in the Papago valley, California, on a fruit ranch and grew apples and some peaches and I can truly say that the Michigan fruit has a flavor that is not equaled in this country, and I tell you I missed that good cool lake water.

"The saying is in California that liars grow on trees, and I will advise any one going west not to believe a real estate agent, and not to buy anything but to rent for one year until you gets his eyes open. Climate is the best thing in the coast country. The Southern Pacific has got the farmers at their mercy, and they are certainly bleeding them on freight rates. I agree with the man from Washington in saying that he could not get back on, for we met people in Spokane who would gladly come back, but they could not raise the railroad fare. My brother lives in Spokane and his wife sold me her nice farm at a sight in hell, and I never heard of that happening in Michigan.

"Now I believe you have some poor land in your country, but I believe if a man will farm more properly improved in Michigan, all things considered, he can't beat it. I have traveled over 20,000 miles looking for a place to locate on a farm and am going to take a trip to Michigan in the near future to see what I can find in the shape of a 40 acre farm."

Notice is hereby given that a Township Caucus for the purpose of placing in nomination, candidates for township offices of the Township of Marion, County of Charlevoix, State of Michigan, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it, will be held in the Township Hall in said township, on Wednesday, the 23d day of March, A. D., 1910, at 1 o'clock p. m.

By order of J. H. Adams, Supervisor.

Mr. Sousa, the famous bandmaster of Venice, compiled for the benefit of strangers, this notice: "When visiting this palace strangers should show themselves especially generous in their tips, as the prince who occupies this palace has no other means of support than to share in the money given to his domestics."—Le Cri de Paris.

Search for Trade Secrets.

Ever since Devol stole an English loom one place at a time, taking the fragments to France and afterward bringing them to Fall River, Mass., where the transcendental parts formed the basis of the chief industry of that city, manufacturers all over the world have been trying to get at the trade secrets of their rivals or to prevent their rivals from discovering their own special processes. Many another great industry has a similar basis of a stolen trade secret.

THE PLANETS.

They All, With Their Satellites, Exhibit Phases Like the Moon.

We are likely to regard the moon as the only thing in the heavens that exhibits phases such as the quarter, the half and the full. As a matter of fact, all planets and their satellites exhibit separately such phases, and most of them can be easily seen with a small power telescope. Thus Mars and Venus which are comparatively close to the earth, show through the telescope at times a beautiful crescent, at others a half planet fully as brilliant, equaling the full moon in apparent size, at others upon the planets suffer eclipse, just as the earth, the moon and the sun, and these eclipses are foretold with as great accuracy.

As to just what causes the phases any of the moon, is easy to comprehend by a homely analogy. If one stands in a corner of a room, places a globe or some description in the middle and sets a light in the lord corner the phenomenon of the half moon is seen. The light, representing the sun, shines of course on half the globe representing the moon, but the observer in the corner sees only half of the surface to which the illumination. If now the globe be placed behind the observer and a little nearer to the light, a crescent will be seen, the "moon," however, shining on the same area of surface as before, merely allowing the time a view from the "earth" of the whole amount of illumination. All the phases can be demonstrated in this manner by moving the "moon" directly outward from its corner.

One of the greatest discoveries of reason due to observation of the eclipses of Jupiter's moons. It was found that when the earth was in the part of its orbit nearest to Jupiter these eclipses occurred sixteen minutes earlier than when it was in the farthermost part, whereas by all rules of astronomy the sixth moon was occurring at the same minutes each time. It was deduced from this that light was not instantaneous and consequently took sixteen minutes to traverse the diameter of the earth's orbit, a distance of about 200,000,000 miles, thus giving light a velocity of 186,000 miles a second, which was accurately shown later by other experiments.—St. Louis Republic.

WATCH SPRINGS.

Not Surprising They Break Considering the Work They Do.

The mainspring of a watch does not unwind at a uniform rate, but intermittently. It is subjected to a tension jerk at every tick—four times per second for any watch. This makes 345,600 times per day and over 126,000,000 times per year. This operating condition is analogous to others discussed in Kent's "Mechanical Pocketbook" under the heads of "Relation of the Elastic Limit of Endurance Under Repeated Stresses" and "Resistance of Metals to Repeated Shocks." Among other things it says:

"Another long known result of experience is the fact that a spring may be caused by a succession of shocks to impart some of the work which would be sufficient to cause it. Iron axles, springs, rails, car wheels, shafts, and other pieces of metal subject to continuous or repeated shocks have broken break after a certain length of service. They have 'a life which is limited.'"

Walker found in testing iron by repeated impacts that limited that in one case 400,000 repetitions of a stress of 500 centners to the square inch caused a rupture, while a similar bar remained sound after 10,000,000 applications of a stress of 320 centners to the square inch. One centner equals 1102 pounds. The mainspring of a watch is not only under a considerable tension stress, but also under a bending stress when suddenly released, then immediately stopped by the escapement mechanism. It is then probable that its molecular cohesive power deteriorates in a manner similar to those quoted.—Scientific American.

Thawa in the mountains have caused avalanches and snoslides that have swept away mountain towns and sections of railroad tracks from Nevada to British Columbia. Floods also have caused widespread damage.

In the Cascade mountains in Washington two Great Northern trains were buried by an avalanche. Twenty bodies were recovered and scores are injured or missing. The exact number of deaths caused by avalanches in the Rockies in Idaho and in western Montana probably will not be known until the snow melts and the great masses of snow and ice in the canon into which avalanches hurled them are swept.

Further details of the disaster in which an avalanche swept two Great Northern passenger trains and a portion of the road at Wellington, Wash., down the mountainside at the western portal of the Cascade tunnel show that it is to be more serious than first reported. Twenty-three lives are known to have been lost, many of the mass of snow, stone and uprooted trees buried the passenger cars were thrown from the snow over the narrow ledge to the bottom of the canyon 200 feet below the tracks. Twenty-five more were reported missing. Besides these a score were injured.

The avalanche rolled down the mountain at 4:30 a. m. The two trains, three locomotives, four powerful electric motors, the dining and water tank were swept off the ledge and deposited in a twisted mass of wreckage at the foot of the mountain. The noise from the snowslide, which was a mile long, could be heard throughout the valley. The wrecked trains lie piled on top of each other for 150 feet below the siding on which they stood when the avalanche swept over them. The crews were crushed into kindling wood and no one in the train escaped injury. The slide filled the siding, on which the tracks at Wellington are laid and rolled over the other line of rails.

Messages telling of the disaster were sent to Everett and a relief train bearing physicians, nurses and workmen, was made up and dispatched. Rescuing in previous times which blocked the road and swept away parts of the track, the rescuers could get no further than Scenic, whence the rescuers had to make their way on foot over the snow.

In the later wreck of Oriental limited train No. 2, east bound, on the Great Northern, one person was killed and twelve were injured. The entire train escaped plunging down a fifty-foot embankment near Milmo by a narrow margin. It carried 175 passengers. As the train was rounding a curve in the engineer, Alonzo Carle, of Spokane, saw a great mass of boulders blocking the way. Curtis Crews on the emergency brakes twenty-five feet before the train ran into the rocks. When the train struck the mass gas tanks in the cars exploded. Fire started but was extinguished by the crew of the forward cars and they began to topple over the embankment. Conductor H. H. Hedrick quickly ran forward and uncoupled the last car from the train.

The exact number of dead in all the disasters will not be known for several days, which is over forty in the aggregate. Many bodies were recovered from the ravine where the snowslide struck two Great Northern trains.

EFFECTS OF A SNOWSLIDE IN THE MOUNTAINS.

MOB RULES DALLAS, TEXAS.

Takes Aged Colored Man from Court and Fai Him to Death.

Snatched from before the bar of justice, where his trial on the charge of criminally assaulting a 2-year-old white child was about to begin, Allen Brooks, an aged negro, was lynched in Dallas, Texas, by a mob of 5,000 men.

Brooks was seated in the courtroom by fifteen leaders of the avenging mob and was tossed through a window to the main body, which waited like a pack of ravening wolves for their prey, in the street below. His broken body was dragged through the street and he was hanged to the Elks' arch, high above the heads of the crowded citizens. The mob was led by an old negro. With it all hardly a loud word was spoken, not a shot was fired, and above the dull murmurings of the mob one could hear the aged negro's pleading shrieks for mercy.

After Brooks was hanged Dallas for nearly three hours was in the hands of the mob. The city was terrorized and details was threatened to three other negroes held on charges of murder. They had been spirited away, however, and after searching for them in vain the mob dispersed.

The crime for which Brooks paid the penalty was one of the most brutal in the history of Dallas. His victim is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Raven.

TOWNS IN OHIO INUNDATED.

Thousands in Distress, Traffic Impeded, Business Demoralized.

Fifty thousand people homeless, other thousands living on the second floor of their homes, traffic impeded and business demoralized in many places, is the situation in Ohio as the result of the floods. A bridge was washed away at Defiance. Mechanicsburg is still under water. Boat only can be used in the greater part of Warren, where the Mahoning is on a rampage. Water is creeping upon the business section of Napoleon, and the Cuyahoga River has inundated Clinton and Warwick. Rain is still falling in the southern part of the state, which will add to the flood in the Ohio River valley. At Zanesville several hundred families have been driven from their homes and the suffering is acute. Present great danger still lurks about the gorged Sandusky River.

PLOT WRECK AND LOOT.

Boys Open Switch with Idea Robbing Visiting Bodies.

The arrest of George Lenko, aged 16 years; Stephen Voski, 14 years; Edward Cyzoski, 12; Andrew Milters, 12, and Arthur Tydoski, 19, revealed the attempt of these youngsters to wreck the early New Haven Railroad train leaving New York shortly after noon, for the purpose, as they confessed, of looting the bodies of the dead and injured. They got up for a season the switch near the east Port Chester (Conn.) freight yard. A switchman happened to see them and closed it in time to avert an accident. The boys admitted that they were regular attendants at moving pictures shows in Port Chester and had acquired some of their ideas of outlawry from the lurid dramatic scenes of the "canned drama."

HOGS REACH THE HIGH RECORD.

Lots of $8 Sold at $10, Average Paid Mills for Death.

Hogs reached the high record of $10 per 100 pounds the other day in the Chicago market, while $8.50 was paid in Indianapolis and $8.85 in St. Louis. The price equals the mark set in 1879 and only the war price of $12.25 paid in 1865 remains to be broken.

The winter packing season, which closed the other day, is expected to show a shortage of 2,000,000 hogs compared with the corresponding four months a year ago. When hogs reached $8 in the Chicago stockyards it was expected a big rush would follow, but it failed to materialize. The sensational good news the price advanced lifted good when the price advanced to $9, and the trade is cautiously waiting to see the effect on the country of $10 hogs.

KILLS 52 RAILROADERS.

Avalanche on Canadian Pacific Road Buries Score of Workers.

Ninety-two Canadian Pacific trainmen, track men and laborers were buried by an avalanche in Rogers Pass on the summit of the Selkirk range of the Rocky Mountains. All probably are dead. Only five bodies have been recovered. They are those of Roadmaster Fraser, Fireman Griffith, Dougan and Hodgins of Revelstoke and a Japanese. Week of recovering the dead and opening the track was grown by impeded by a blizzard raging in the pass. There was another big slide of snow and rock a mile east of the spot where the men were overwhelmed, it buried a portion of a snow shed and buried the track for the yards to a depth of 40 feet. There were no victims in the last avalanche.

IDENTIFIED AS TORTURER.

Aged Victim Accuses Prisoner of Robbery and Torture After Robbery.

"This is the man that found me and my wife and kept us in the cellar and told where we had hidden our money," said John Wagner, 80 years old, as he pointed to Jed Slack, a man of fifty, of right men at the Ellis police station in Kansas City, Mo. Twenty years ago, but I shall never forget his face." Slack was held in jail to await trial for burglary. Two companions are serving terms in prison for the crime, but Slack escaped and was captured on his return home. As the prisoner was led to his cell he mused aloud and said: "I have to pay—that the guilty one would be captured, because those men were responsible for my wife's death."

PRICES UP IN ALL COUNTRIES.

Statistics Show Advance in Meat Figures Throughout World.

The advance in the price of meats in the United States in recent years seems to correspond, in a measure at least, with conditions which have caused increases in meat prices throughout the world, not only in those countries which do not produce much meat, but also in Argentina, Australia, New Zealand, Canada and other countries which produce a surplus for export. The government has gathered some interesting statistics upon the subject. It is found that the advance in the price of fresh meats is less than in salted and preserved meats, and in nearly all cases the advance has been less in beef than in pork or mutton.

In Australia beef preserved by cold process advanced in export price from $5.22 per 100 pounds in the years 1901-1905, mutton and lamb from $8.82 per 100 pounds in 1899 to 1647 in 1907. From Canada the price of fresh beef exports advanced from an annual average of $7.14 per pound in 1895 to $.2 cents in 1909, that of mutton from $.1 to $1.2 cents and that of pork from 1.1 cents to 1.4 cents.

In all the European cities show, wherever statistics are available, higher prices have prevailed than in the United States. Neither locomotive was derailed. Five hundred or 600 feet of track was torn up. There were probably eighty passengers aboard the train, which was due in Chicago at 9:30 a. m. A second train was made up at Cleveland and sent to the scene of the wreck. The passengers were taken aboard this train and sent to destination.

GENERAL STRIKE TIES UP ALL PHILADELPHIA

General Walkout in Sympathy with Street Car Men Takes Effect at Midnight.

MILITIA IS HELD IN READINESS

Labor Leaders Assert 100,000 Union Workers Will Obey Order—Impartial Estimate 40,000.

A general strike of the unions in sympathy with the striking street car men went into effect in Philadelphia at midnight the other night. Simultaneously it became known, despite the denial of Tom Clay, head of the police forces that every national guard regiment in the state of Pennsylvania has received orders to be ready to entrain for Philadelphia at an hour's notice.

The labor leaders are shouting exultantly that 100,000 men have lined up with the striking motormen and conductors. The police canvassers make the figure less than 21,000. An impartial estimate is 40,000, a little more or a little less.

While the labor leaders are reviving the moral support from their fellow workmen in all parts of the country, many members of employers have sent letters and telegrams to the officials of the Rapid Transit Company and the city officials commending the stand taken and urging them to refuse to be in their determination not to submit to the strikers' demand for a union contract. The strikers' leaders of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company made no mistake in their tactics in broadening into a fight between employers who insist on their right to run their business and labor unions. From now on the issue is the life or death of the organized labor in Philadelphia.

All policemen, firemen and special who have been on duty since the strike began received orders to remain at their posts. The emergency automobiles in the city hall courtyard were increased in number and members told off to send a force of men to any section of the city if a necessity arose. Many of these machines are driven by their owners, working men, who have their owners, working men, who have been sworn in.

The outlook is ominous, even to the most cheerful observers. So much hinges on the outcome of the first few days that the people of Philadelphia are preparing for any kind of trouble.

EIGHTY IN PERIL ON FLYER.

Twentieth Century Limited, Bound for Chicago, Derailed.

For a reason not be determined, the Twentieth Century Limited, bound for the Lake Shore Railroad was derailed at Hudson, Ohio, 25 miles west of Cleveland, the other day. This train was running at a speed of 60 miles an hour. Two or three passengers whose names have not yet been learned were slightly injured. The train was running as a double-header and had a standard load. All the seven cars were derailed, but were not thrown more than a few inches from the tracks. Neither locomotive was derailed. Five hundred or 600 feet of track was torn up. There were probably eighty passengers aboard the train, which was due in Chicago at 9:30 a. m. COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. G. Dun & Co's weekly review of Chicago trade says:

"The advent of seasonable weather and a cheering tone in business. Trading dollars have fallen in both number and liabilities to the smallest since April, 1907. March settlements are seen to be remarkably heavy and the volume of solvent payments through the banks establishes a new high record. Financial conditions become decidedly favorable and ample accumulation of funds offers encouragement to extended enterprise in commerce and investment.

"Railroad operations rapidly return to the normal, while the returns indicate increasing movements of finished and raw products, general merchandise, grain and shipping trade.

"Distress of the leading industries continue rising, and the outlook for early work in these industries, or miscellaneous materials and machinery heads. Portable during February for new business structures and additions were seventy in number and $2,264,000 in value, as compared with forty-seven in number and $958,500 in value in 1909.

"Dealings in the principal wholesale and retail branches of general merchandise make a favorable comparison with this time last year.

"Bank clearings, $1,000,000,197, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1909 by 24.7 per cent, and compare with $264,797,314 in 1908. Failures reported in the Chicago district for the week were 31 against twenty-one last week, twenty-seven in 1909 and forty in 1908. The strength of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company marks the end of an era in which broadened into a fight between employers who insist on their right to run their business and labor unions. From now on the issue is the life or death of the organized labor in Philadelphia.

TRAMP SAVES CHILD'S LIFE.

Hatchet Tosses Man Who Pulled Girl Crosse in Front of Train.

Frank Strome a few days ago was a tramp beating his way westward on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad. Today he owns a half interest in the Valvedere cattle range, and is to be married early in April with its 30,000 head of cattle and 100 cowboys on the range in Jed Smith and Peesia counties in Texas. The range is owned by Samuel W. Jennings, reported to be worth several millions. A few days ago the 3-year-old daughter of Jennings was crossing the railroad track. A train was bearing down on her, and a passenger brakeman, Frank Strome grabbed her and pulled her from the track. Strome was not in war, but persons who witnessed the rescue reported the matter, and three days ago he was located by Jennings and taken to the ranch. A day or two later a deed was filed transferring a half interest in the property to the girl's rescuer.

Woodsman Bitten by Wolves.

James Smith, a woodsman, was attacked by wolves in the forest near Ally, Mo., after fighting a desperate battle for his life. The wolves attacked him while he was alone, awaiting the return of a brother. When the latter returned he found his brother's house in the woods with the door broken in, wolves, while an empty repeating rifle lay beside the door, and he concluded before he could reload the weapon.

BAY CITY FIRE LOSS $40,000.

Mitchell Dry Goods Store Burned Out—Others Badly Damaged.

Fire that started in the basement of J. A. Mitchell's dry goods store on the west side, in Bay City, caused nearly $40,000 damage to Mitchell's store, the Moke Clothing Company, the Lenox Furniture Company, Abe Cigar Company, and the Roth Jewelry, occupied by Mitchell. The fire did not reach the Mohr or Lenox stocks, being confined to Mitchell's store by the fire-proof, but the smoke was so heavy in both the other stores that for two hours the firemen were unable to enter either place, and the damage is caused by smoke. The fire is supposed to have started either from the furnace or from a match carelessly thrown in the basement of the J. A. Mitchell store.

The Supreme Court in a decision rendered the other day affirmed the decision of Judge Clement in the case of Edwin Henderson against the Board of Election Commissioners of Saginaw County, holding that voting machines afford a secret ballot and are legal.

ALL OVER THE STATE.

Michael Kolchaw, aged 28, a Russian Pole, was instantly killed in the woods near Boyne City by a falling tree.

Dr. Frederick Ernest of Jackson Hyde, a member of the Port Huron fire department, was seriously burned when he began a bottle of carbolic acid.

Among the candidates for admission at the Ann Arbor high school commencement who successfully passed the examinations and will be admitted in June are 17 girls and 2 boys.

Wakely Kilborn, exactly treasurer of the Michigan Sugar company, has been arrested for bootlegging. Brought into court, he pleaded not guilty and was held under $2,000 bond for Judge Collins.

Sergeant John X. Foster, of Ypsilanti, died Monday of paralysis, at the age of 66 years. He was formerly superintendent of the State school at Coldwater and assistant superintendent of the industrial school at Lansing.

Louie Lee, a well-known Sault Ste. Marie Chinaman, has married a young Indian girl at Kewadin, where the ceremony was conducted by a Presbyterian minister.

It has been definitely decided by the State military board that Battery A, the artillery, of Saginaw, will be assigned to Niles Lutheans, who will be the only artillery organization. It is alleged that Ruthie once vowed before Niles Lutheans that she would never marry, and Lutheans, in a fit of the candy, when it was received by Ruthie, Ruthie, in a fit of the candy, immediately died. It is alleged, Dr. Sheppard, of Hutchinson, was not the cause of the candy, to the State Militia. He pleaded guilty to charges from a more severe sentence. He is under probation for the term of two years.

Pinchot Gives Ballinger Credit.

Capitain H. C. Bartlett, a veteran of the Civil War and a wealthy Joplin, Mo., mine owner, discovered an unexpected epicurean taste in King, his 11,000 black horse, when the animal picked a four-carat diamond valued at $750 from his master's shirt bosom, crushed it between his teeth and swallowed it.

Graft Witness Commits Suicide.

Walter Dunn, 30 years old, who was expected to be the principal witness for the State in the prosecution of former county commissioners indicted in Tiffin, O., recently for alleged graft, big committed suicide today. His death will seriously hamper the prosecution.

Fireman Falls Two Stories to Death.

In fighting fire which destroyed the hotel of a University building in Murray street, New York, occupied by printing firm, Harry Hanson, a fireman, was instantly killed. Burgess accidentally walked into the elevator shaft and dropped to death.

American Held in Mexico.

Oscar H. Wood, postmaster at Clarkston, N. M., is held by the Mexican authorities at Juarez on a charge of assaulting a Mexican official and a Mexican policeman. He attempted to escape on a train, but was captured.

Boy Vanished, Found Dead.

For some fault 10-year-old Gerald Gallagher of Providence, R. I., was locked in a room by his mother. Mrs. Gallagher, in the meantime, had left a liberate him she found him dead. The lad had acidentally turned on the gas and asphyxiated himself.

EX-SENATOR PLATT DIES.

Former Empire State Boss Falls Victim to Bright's Disease.

Former United States Senator Thomas Collier Platt, Republican leader of the State of New York for years and intimately interested in the Republican party from its organization in 1856, died unexpectedly the other afternoon in his apartments, 123 West 11th street, New York. He would have been 77 years old if he had lived until next July. The direct cause of Mr. Platt's death was acute Bright's disease. For a number of years he had suffered with palsy of the legs, which necessitated his occupying a wheel chair most of the time. Within the last two years, though, evidences of Bright's disease had become apparent.

Senator Platt was born in Owego, N. Y., July 15, 1833. He spent two years at Yale, afterwards became a druggist and, moving to New York City, entered the United States Express Company service, of which he was afterward manager and president.

After serving in the House he was elected to the National Senate in 1881. On account of patronage differences with President Garfield he resigned from the Senate along with his colleague, Conkling, as a rebuke to the President. He was defeated for reelection in 1886 by Hamilton Fish, but was elected to the Senate, in which position he had the gold plank placed in the Republican platform. In 1898 he was again elected to the Senate. In politics he is credited with having made all political decisions for years. Although reputed wealthy his fortune was comparatively small.

EX-SENATOR T. C. PLATT.

LIVE-STOCK RECEIPTS FALL OFF.

Government Figures Show Heap from Previous Years in January.

Internal-commerce movements in January, according to statistics of the department of commerce and labor, showed heavy movements of coal and coke in the east, increased grain exports at the interior markets and light movements of fine stock in the middle west and of cotton in the south. The movement of cattle, sheep and other live stock receipts during the month showed a falling off from the preceding month of 2,706,852 and 4,520,835 head in January of 1909 and 1908. Receipts of hogs for the month were the lowest of January, 1909, and 35 per cent below the January, 1908, total, all the dikes sharing in the decline.

Shipments of cattle and house products from Chicago aggregated 167,350,823 pounds, compared with 189,354,551 and 317,237,127 pounds during January of 1909 and 1908.

MONKEYS IN BATTLE.

They Fight Under Leaders and Roll Stones on Enemies.

Aesop's ape, it will be remembered, went on passing through a human graveyard scrutinizing the marks on the dead ancestors, and that all monkeys are willing enough to be moralized on thus they are fear chary of their mimicry.

An old authority tells that the easiest way to capture apes is for the hunter to pretend to shave himself then to stick his face, fill the basin with a set of bilobiane and leave it for the apes to blind themselves. If the Chinese story is to be believed the imitative ape is even more fatal in modified way, for if you shoot one monkey of a troop with a professional arrow its mate, jealous of so unusual a decoration, will snatch the arrow from it and stab itself; only to have it torn away by a third, until in succession the whole troop lies committed suicide.

In their wild life baboons as well as many varieties of the monkey tribe undoubtedly submit to the authority of recognized leaders. There is evidence between them to the extent that when fighting in company one will go to the help of another which is hard pressed.

In rocky ground they roll down stones upon their enemies, and when making a raid, even on an orchard which they have to go around, the attack is conducted on an organized plan, sentries being posted and scouts thrown out which cautiously feel their way forward to make sure that the coast is clear while the main body remains in concealment behind until told that the road is open.

From the fact that the sentries stay posted throughout the raid, getting for themselves no share of the booty, it has been assumed that there must be some sort of division of the proceeds afterward. Man, again, has been differentiated from all other creatures as being a tool using animal, but more than one kind of monkey takes a stone in its hand and with it breaks the nuts which are too hard to be cracked with the teeth.—London Globe.

CHANCES OF LIFE.

Probability at Your Age of How Long You Will Live.

After we are dead it probably will not concern us whether we died at twenty or fifty or ninety, but just now most of us are intensely interested to know, and, being average persons in sound health, we can figure out with certainty just what our chances are of reaching any particular age, says Harper's Weekly.

If we are just 20 years of age, our chances of living to at beyond 30 are nearly 12 to 1; of living to be 40, 6¾ to 1; to be 50, 3 to 1; to be 60, 1-2-3 to 1. Of living to be 70 we have less than 1 chance in 2½; to be 80, less than 1 chance in 5½, and to be 90, less than 1 chance in 100.

If we have reached 30, our chances to reach 40 are nearly 11 to 1; to be 50, nearly 4½ to 1; to be 60, 2¾ to 1, to be 70, fifty chances in 19; to be 80, 1 chance in 5½; to be 90, 1 chance in 100.

The average man of 40 has 88 chances in 1 of reaching his fifthieth birthday, 2¾ chances in 1 of attaining 60, only 5 chances out of 10 of reaching 70, 1 chance in 2¾ of reaching 80, and 1 chance in 100 of becoming 90.

Having been lucky in all the dangerous years, the average man, 50 years of age, has 4½ chances in 1 of becoming 60; to become 70 the chances are 1¼ to 1 in his favor; to become 80 he has but 1 chance in 5 and to become 90 1 chance in 100.

If already 60 the average citizen has 2 chances to 1 of becoming 70, 1 chance in 4 of becoming 80 and 1 chance in 40 of reaching 90.

The man of 70 has 3 chances in 8 of becoming 80 and 1 in 50 of becoming 90.

If one has weathered the storm until his eightieth birthday he has 1 chance in 17 of reaching his ninetieth milestone.

It will be observed that as we get older our chances of reaching 90 increase greatly.

A Cruel Gibe.

Knife—What a lovely ring! Mistletoe! Its this ring was given me on my twenty-first birthday. Knife—Gem! Why, how well preserved it is! It's hardly a bit worn!—Cleveland Leader.

Foster Bros. have been putting up ice the past few days for the coming season. Many trout are found frozen in the ice. In one cake there were ten trout where there were from two to six inches in length. These trout were caught in the shallow water where the electric lighting plant burned, and undoubtedly many thousands of them were frozen in the ice during the hard freeze which followed. The largest trout found so far measured only about six inches in length, but the majority of them were only about two inches long. This is explained by the fact that all the large trout seek deeper water at all times of the year and thus escaped being frozen.—Bellaire Independent.

Northern Michigan

East Jordan Herald: A. M. Haight has purchased the Farwell Cooperage Co. plant at Farwell, Mich., and will move same to East Jordan and commence erection of buildings and placing of machinery therein, at once. The plant is not as large as that of the East Jordan Cooperage Co., but will nevertheless be a substantial addition to East Jordan's manufacturing interests. The plans will manufacture heading, and apple barrels in season.

Elk Rapids special: Peter Mark and Antoine Auce left here Tuesday morning to fish on the bay about three miles below the village and since that nothing has been heard from them. The ice where they were last seen was only about two inches in thickness. Auce is an Indian, Peter Mark is white, his light name is Beardsley, but he was brought up by an Indian family. It is thought here that they went towards the Old Mission to fish in the deep water and broke through the ice and perished.

East Jordan Herald: The East Jordan Electric Light & Power Co. was last week sold to Chas. S. Abbott, of Detroit, who has purchased the stock of the company. The company will be reorganized and, we understand, their plans are to increase the power plant in the village at once, and as soon as practicable, develop the water power on the Jordan river, the site for which is controlled by the company. Supt. Plank will continue with the new firm. W. A. Loveday, who has been secretary of the company for a number of years, has withdrawn and will in the future devote his attention to real estate, insurance, and the opera house.

The long standing trouble in district No. 1, Acme township, reached a climax Wednesday night of last week when the township board took summary action, removing the school board. The school house burned in July last in a mysterious way, and no school has been held since, the district losing its primary school money. The school board removed was composed of J. Pritchpar, Joseph Hanna and H. C. Reed. The town board consists of D. H. Hoxsie, John Hoxsie, Hope Phillips and A. W. Green. For years there has been a struggle in the district over the location of the school house, and since the burning of the school house last summer the breach has widened. The probabilities are that the matter will now be taken into the courts.

A club made up of ladies who are willing to help in an organized effort to secure local option for Antrim county was formed at Bellaire last Thursday. It was called The Woman's Local Option club of Antrim county and it has representatives in every organization in and around Bellaire. Similar clubs will be formed in different parts of the county and every effort will be made by the members to swell the enthusiasm in the fight against the liquor business. A mass meeting has been appointed to work up the business men to securing funds for the campaign. On election day the Local Option club at Bellaire will serve a free dinner to every one, and the school children will sing temperance songs and occupy floats in the parade.

Facing death from shot and shell in the civil war was more agreeable to J. A. Stone, of Kemp, Tex., than facing it from what doctors said was consumption. He "contracted a stubborn cold" he writes, "that developed a cough, that stuck to me in spite of all remedies for years. My weight ran down to 130 pounds. Then I began to use Dr. King's New Discovery, which completely cured me. I now weigh 178 pounds." For coughs, colds, lagrippe, asthma, hemorrhage, hoarseness, croupe, whooping cough and lung trouble, its supreme. Use $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by F. G. Ellis & Co.

An Elegant Specimen of Nerve.

Mr. J. Knox Hall, of Tonlon, Ills., sends the SENTINEL a circular headed "Six Books of Copy Ready for Your Copy Hook for $10.00." The circular then proceeds to relate that the books "simply contain copy on, every subject, ready for you to cut, out the page desired and hang it on your copy hook. You prepare copy in one minute that would otherwise take you hours. If one in your community dies you will find an obituary just suited to the case. You have copy to fill in names and dates. If you have a wedding, party or any social function, you will find it in these books just suiting for the occasion and dates. If you want to give your town, your business men or your schools a good "send off" you have copy to cut out the right page and hang it on your copy book. There is not an item you will need for your paper that you will not find in six of these books."

The circular states, among many other interesting things, that the books are sold to not one paper in a town, that the author has had fifty years experience, etc.

A country editor, however obscure his paper, who would make a deal of this sort should be expelled from his press association, if he belongs to one, and socially ostracized. A newspaper man who is too lazy or too ignorant to write his own "stuff" should get out of the business, for he is a disgrace to it.

There is one exception to this rule which we take this occasion to speak of. This paper, in common with almost every paper in Western Michigan, is printing weekly matter sent to the press by the Development Bureau. It appears as original matter, and is intended by the Bureau so to be treated.

—This is the time of the year when the fruit growers of Western Michigan should begin to arrange spraying campaigns. Inasmuch as the quality and quantity of the fruit to be raised can be increased fully fifty per cent by spraying it is foolish to neglect this important matter. The program should be spray, spray, spray, and then spray again.

—Dr. and Mrs. Harney were the victims of a surprise, last Wednesday evening by the girls club, of which Mattie was a member before her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Rachow were present as guests, and, to all intents and purposes, were as young as the young ones of the bunch, or they always are on such occasions. The clubbroupt with them a beautiful chair as a token of its love for Mattie, a former member and chum, now forever barred from membership because of Doc Harney "butting in." But Mattie's popularity may be the cause of an amendment to the by laws admitting to membership married ladies who remain young.

—We don't know who will be mayor and we care less, except that, as a matter of constitutional principle, we want republicans to come out on top, always and everywhere. Make a note of that. But we want to say a word about the retiring chief magistrate of this municipality. No city, or any size, anywhere, ever had a mayor who more conscientiously, industriously and honestly did his full duty than mayor O. E. Wilbur. He has no explanations to make or apologies to offer. He has served wood all the time and served it so that both ends were of equal length. If he has at any time unconsciously deviated an inch, both ends have gone into the same pile. If his successor is as faithful and efficient as Wilbur has been, Charlevoix will be fortunate.

—Begin early to clean up your premises.

—Plans for the improvement of the Marion Meech Armstrong farm are beginning to assume shape. Mr. D. F. Meech, who will have personal direction of affairs, stated that 400 cherry trees will be set out this spring, and that 1000 chickens will be kept, for eggs only, and that this feature of the work will be made a specialty.

—It is estimated that the apportionment of the primary fund will reach about 27 per capita this year. Last year it was 26 per capita. There is now $750,000 in the treasury to distribute among the 746,000 school children but with the amount to be collected from corporations under the ad valorum system this spring it is estimated the amount will grow to the proportions mentioned.

—"Information about Spraying for Orchard Insects" will be found on pages 207 to 236, inclusive, in the yearbook of the department of agriculture for 1908. In the above named article occurs the following, "Although spraying is without doubt the most expensive of the several orchard operations the value of the crop is so greatly enhanced thereby that it is a comparatively small investment, the expense amounting to but a fraction of the returns directly due to the practice. Orchard spraying is, in fact, an exceedingly cheap form of insurance."

THE AWAKENING

Fruit and Farming in the Grand Traverse Region—Home Seekers Active.

Traverse City special to the Grand Rapids Press: Some two years ago expositors of a proposed interurban between Traverse City and Charlevoix produced a publication pointing out the fruit and agricultural possibilities of Grand Traverse and adjoining counties. This pamphlet was entitled, "The Awakening of Grand Traverse."

Compared with the real awakening and the results of that awakening in the Grand Traverse bay county the wildest dreams of these expositors were as nothing. The good country to the northwest corner of the lower peninsula indeed is coming into its own. Compared to the millions of dollars destined to be claimed from the fertile soil this attractive agricultural district, the fortunes carved out of its timber are of little importance. Fortunes were made in a season in those days of the timber operation. When the timber had gone the land was left to waste. Fortunes still are made in season, but there is no end. The fortunes continue to be gleaned from the soil season after season.

Grand Traverse's awakening has been noted all over the country. Through the recent display of the Western Michigan Development bureau at Chicago the demand for farming lands has been so insistent that real estate dealers literally are flooded. Michigan not the western irrigation districts on their own ground and sent them so badly that the very purpose of the Chicago exposition was outwitted. The demand shows has been for Michigan lands and not for the irrigated properties of the great west.

In the Chicago exhibit Michigan's fruit was distinguishable from all others by its remarkable and penetrating fragrance. Its fruit looked as well as that from the west, but in flavor and fragrance the western products could in no way compare with that from the western Michigan orchards. Piqued by Michigan's supremacy, some of the western exhibitors asserted the fruit on exhibition was only the choicest, picked from the products of half a state. The reply of Michigan was characteristic.

A buyer was sent down to the market to purchase several barrels of potatoes of No. 1 Michigan spuds. These spuds were brought in and offered to all the doubters. Taken at random these fans fared very favorably with the new fruit, and the doubters were silenced. Before the close of the exhibition at Chicago, officers of the Western Michigan Development bureau were being besieged by persons seeking information about Michigan land. The result is already apparent in the million of acres in Grand Traverse agricultural land was doubled, tripled and quadrupled in value in no time, and the end is not yet.

A Husky Old Soul.

We mean he of the Cameron clan—Alex J. Twenty-five years ago he was bringing broncos up here from Texas and picking out the heaviest of them to himself. Then he hustled broncos in Texas for many years, with his heart still up in Northern Michigan.

Well, Alex and his good wife live out in the suburbs of Charlevoix, in a pleasant little home, on a little farm that is filled with apple trees. There are chickens and pigs, a cow, and a house full of contentment and happiness. The old friends call and carry long with the old people, whose hearts are as young as they were when Alex was busting broncos, and whose hospitality is as sincere as in the old days.

Alex is well up into the seventies, but there is not a man in Charlevoix who can throw him, and certainly not one who does not wish for him and the excellent lady of the house yet many years of health and happiness.

Oh Yes, We See.

We understand that the politicos horoscope portends the following program: The census will bring about a reapportionment of congressional districts, and that Charlevoix county will go in a heap.

This accounts for certain things.

Socialist Nominations.

At the Socialist caucus Monday night the following city ticket was placed in nomination: Mayor, Fred H. Tinsley; ward-alderman, H. Hurley; supervisor, John Kirby; second ward-alderman, H. Allen; supervisor, James Lynn; third ward—alderman W. W. Washburn; supervisor Z. A. Young.

Sure Thing, Lorenzo.

The time has surely arrived when every drinking citizen should work together for the city's good if you never do so before.—Harbor Springs Republican.

MASONIC HOME

Old Folks Made Comfortable Where Once Were Scenes of Social Gaiety.

Grand Rapids Herald: The work of preparing the Lakeside clubhouse at Reed's lake for the accommodation of the former inmates of the destroyed Masonic home has been practically completed and the first of those who are to sojourn there for the next three or four months were received yesterday.

Since the clubhouse was so generously turned over to them by President Hanchett, of the Grand Rapids Railway company, Mr. and Mrs. R. V. McArthur, of the Masonic home, have been diligently at work fitting the place up in a homelike and comfortable manner and have succeeded in creating a very cozy atmosphere. About 40 inmates will be housed and in order to properly accommodate them it has been necessary to make some sweeping changes in the interior arrangements.

The large parlor has been turned into an assembly room and here the old folks will gather for their entertainments and religious meetings. The main banquet hall has been fitted up as a dormitory and will be used for sleeping purposes by the women. Screens have been installed along the outer walls and between each screen have been placed two beds. The little parlor on the south of this will be utilized as a sun parlor for the old people.

The former "stein" room is now a small dormitory for men and contains eight beds, while 26 beds have been placed in the billiard and general refreshment rooms. The New England kitchen in the basement has been turned into a smoking and lounging room, but no change has been made in the dining room, which will be used for the same purpose as formerly.

The establishment is excellently equipped with lavatory and wash rooms. During the past week Mr. and Mrs. McArthur have had the place thoroughly cleaned from cellar to attic and, though there still remain several small arrangements to be completed, it is in excellent shape and quite ready for occupancy.

Let Us Keep Cool.

With three city tickets in the field—Republican, Socialist and Labor—the campaign promises to be lively for the next ten days.

We know of no local issues that are worthy of the name. It will be simply a scramble for who can win. On party lines the republicans should carry the election. There is no principle involved that in any way affects labor interests, and the socialists are in the field on general principles to make a local record. During the past year Charlevoix has found no reason to complain in the contact chamber, and we have heard no complaints as to the result.

Hence, keep cool. We are all citizens and tax-payers together—inhabitants of the best town in Northern Michigan, every one of us interested in the good of all.

There are those who would make local issues for the occasion, to use for their own partisan purposes, but there is nothing in the way to endanger the earth but Halley's comet, and that is yet some way off.

Let us keep cool.

Ice Conditions.

Ice conditions at this writing seem to indicate an early April opening of navigation. Off this port there are large fields of drifting ice, which is broken from the shore and at the mercy of the changing winds.

Yesterday there was clear water up to lighthouse point at Beaver Harbor, and St. James people were anxious for a boat; but information as to conditions here caused their relief. The Coast Village ice trips with the mail have been abandoned for the season.

It looks now, with reasonably warm weather and favorable winds, as if Lake Michigan navigation at this port can be resumed before this paper goes to press. Beaver Harbor, however, under the influence of shifting currents, is clear of ice, but Pine Lake is yet closed as completely as it was in February.

CHAPTER XIV

"One moment," said Meg, as they approached the suburbs, whereon Dido was waiting for them. "Do you know that Everard picked up the bandlet-shelf in the road?"

"Because I overheard his apology to his mother for having put her hero, whether in rude jest or not, Meg, with suspicious promptitude."

"I suppose," hinted the doctor (think it strange, but he should find it there), "Rather possibly that you think, seeing that he must necessarily have been downstairs at the time, that it was his?"

"He was not unusual at that," Pro sententia the circuit court judge, as his mother explained all this—took place to Dr. Eustace, who assured her that I had dropped the bandlet-shelf."

"Did he apologize for his use of it before or after the explanation?" inquired Dr. Eustace.

"After," replied Cordelia, with some hesitation (they abruptly left the Major free able to exclaim a few words in his own defence, and he said that he "knew full of doubts and suspicion, Sotheby, calling her love for Massinia and her expressed desire to avenge his uncle by hanging down his assassin, she appeared to be anything but frank in the matter. He plainly, too, was ashamed of Massinia's conduct—as I have told you, I have not been here long enough to be informed." (Interrupted Jem's mother.)

"My mother tell you we wish to hear my old," she said, abruptly (taking Meg's arm as the pair of them turned towards Dido), "Do you wish? You laugh at old."

"I don't particularly wish to learn your Voodoo secrets," answered Jem, carelessly. "All I desire to know is why you manufactured that scout with which you astonished a certain familiar-bed of your mamma."

"Dodo's," said Meg, "Dido," explained Isabella, interrupting. "The one you found round my bandlet."

"Oh, dat a Voodoo amuli to drive away de evil spirits," said Dido, suddenly and fiercely (which more particularly to Gloomy Isabella, who thought it was the Major).

"Dat a Voodoo amuli! Dat a Voodoo amuli! Dat a Voodoo amuli—kill!—kill!"

"By means of the other?"

"No, dat only drifts away bad debbils. Dat you attach de skin will one feelin' bit of it, and you die, de die."

"And the scratch is made by means of the wind of sleep?"

"Yis, Dat a bad Dido, with pretended saturine, turning on him sharply. "Dat a bad Dido, Massa! Dat a bad Dido! What you know of de Wand of Sleep—de Devil-stick?"

"Because I had one, Dido."

"Dat a bad Dido, Massa! Dat a bad Dido!"

"Dead, Dido, dat one big lie. Dey ain't no debbil-stick, but in the King's palace at Kumasee."

"You are wrong," said Meg, quietly.

"Wrig, of course," interrupted Isabella, as she thought fit to correct her sister. "The negress laughed with scornful doubt.

"No, dat one big lie. Dey ain't no debbil-stick, but in the King's palace at Kumasee."

"You are wrong, I had one, and it was stolen."

"Dat a bad Dido, Massa! Dat a bad Dido!"

"Why, of course," interrupted Isabella, again. "Don't you remember, Dido, you were asleep if you had taken it."

"No, you. Now I remember," said Dido. "Ah, massa, you say I took de debbil-stick out de nest, and you hit him. Dey dat I kill wit him massa, who bitched dat nest, and dat I make spells in your house to steal de body. Hey, dat no, no?"

"It certainly is so," assented Jem, astonished to hear her put his suspicions into such plain words. "Mr. Aylmer was killed by means of this poison. It was used again to render my servant inactive; and the body was stolen. Do I thought I know?"

"I know," interrupted Dido, impatiently. "But dat not to do with me. De poison in your debbil-stick."

"Three sticks! but it was all dried up."

"No! Dat needs. If you pour water dat stick do poison come alive. Well, dat stick taken, but I go back. I. Dat poor young mason, killed wid 'Ki-ai' fell down. But de sudder ting, ah. Dat smell! I made it for mine. Ah! dat! And having made this explanation, Dido rolled her eyes, and gave a scornful glance to hear what her accuser had to say, in consideration the absolute absurdity of her story, which—on the face of it—was manifest incretion, and one which, it would seem, was supported by the testimony of her fellow.

"Do you actually now, I think," said this latter, seeing that the Major did not speak.

"Well, yes, Miss Dallas," returned he, with much deliberation, "I am actually—for the little time—doing."

Once Dido's explanation give you any clue?

"It gives me a clue in a direction for which I should not have looked for it. Thank you, Miss Dallas—and you, Dido. I shall now say good-day.

"When will you return?"

"When I have followed to its end the clue of which we have been speaking," replied he, and taking off his hat, he walked swiftly away from the house.

"What an unusual person the Master of the drive, Isabella, with a very pale face, and tragedy eyes."

"I have told all the lies you wished me to tell," she said, quietly, "and have hidden from this sharp eyes of Major Dallas the fact that I know why you manufactured that scout which you astonished a certain familiar-bed of your mamma."

"Dodo's," said Meg, "Dido," explained Isabella, interrupting. "The one you found round my bandlet."

"Oh, dat a Voodoo amuli to drib away de evil spirits," said Dido, suddenly and fiercely (which more particularly to Gloomy Isabella, who thought it was the Major).

"Dat a Voodoo amuli! Dat a Voodoo amuli! Dat a Voodoo amuli—kill!—kill!"

"By means of the other?"

"No, dat only drib away bad debbils. Dat you attach de skin will one feelin bit of it, and you die, dis, die."

"And the scratch is made by means of the wind of sleep?"

JOY THAT BRINGS WOE

Shock of Sudden Glad Tidings at Times Turns the Brain,

IT HAS DRIVEN PEOPLE MAD.

Some of the Saddest Cases of Lunacy Are Those Where the Mind Is Unable to Stand the Strain of News of Unexpected Good Fortune.

It is no exaggeration to assert, said an asylum doctor of long and varied experience, that there are scores of men and women in insane asylums who have literally been sent there through excess of joy. Many of these cases end in the asylum, in my opinion, the saddest of all have come under my own observation.

I remember in the very first asylum with which I was connected one of the patients was a brilliantly handsome and very well educated man, who was as sane as you or I except on one point. He was really a man of considerable wealth, but his delusion was that he was a pauper, and he would tell the most pitiful tales of his destitution, begging with tears in his eyes for a few coppers with which to buy food.

Coupled to the story told me, he was the only son of a wealthy merchant. In his youth he had fallen among evil companions and had led such a dissolute life that his father has only threatened to disinherit him, but fortunately did not live to enter the same much. After that he seems to have sunk into the lowest depths of poverty until he was glad to earn a few coppers by selling papers or matches in the streets.

It was at this that sad lowest stage that news came to him that his father had died intestate and that he was heir to all his vast fortune. The sudden news completely turned the man's brain and brought on such a condition of excitement that he had to be sent to an asylum, and when he calmed down again he had lost all recollection of his good fortune, and nothing could shake his delusion that he was on the verge of starvation.

Another patient in the same asylum was a young man in his fourth month a most intelligent fellow, whose "brain was normal," so the saying is, so startling that he had passed an examination. He had sent for the matriculation examination to the University of London, on passing which he had set his heart upon his father's friend in London to give the result as soon as the news were received at Huntingdon House.

Short time afterwards he came to me in great distress, for he was not a penny in his pocket. Sadly and in a pitiable state of dejection he told me that the student's reason gave way, and he became so violent that he had to be confined. Fortunately for him and with no bad end to now, I am glad to know, doing very well as a soldier.

Disappointed hopes only many people to serious, but it is very seldom that it actually drives a man mad. It had this strange effect, however, on one of my fellow patients. The girl he loved had gone off to India to keep house for her brother before he had proposed to his courtship to the point of actually to her, but he was on after followed by most very quickly after her.

Weeks and months passed and no answer came to the impatient lover and, with other waiting two years in despair he became engaged to a girl who had nothing but her money bags to recommend her and for whom he had not a particle of love. Scarcely, however, was the fate sealed than he received the long despatched of letter from India, accepting his offer and expressing that the girl's product had received and mislaid the letter, which had only just been found and had come into her hands.

Within an hour of the receipt of this letter the man was a raving maniac, and, although his condition is hopeless, I think, whether he will ever recover his reason.

In another remarkable case it was the joy of seeing her husband again that robbed a lady patient of her reason. The husband was the captain of a merchant ship which was reported to have gone down with all hands. The widow had deeply mourned her husband for twelve months, when one day on returning from a walk she found him sitting in her drawing room as hale and robust as ever.

With a shriek she fell unconscious on the floor, and when she recovered her senses was gone. It seems that her husband, after floating for some time, had been picked up by a passing "tramp" and had been landed in the West Indies of Africa, from which he had returned home by the first available vessel.—London Spectator.

Charitable.

It is said of the author of a volume of biography that the verdict on the great of his chosen period is much that of the New Hampshire parson in the highly spiced Biglow papers: a parsonic lower "Brethren, we might agree that our departed friend was strong in some things, but he was in Christian charity allow that he was weak in others."

GEOGRAPHICAL ODDITIES.

Some Peculiar Facts About These Great United States.

The following collection of geographical peculiarities about the United States and places therein embodies certain oddity points well worth remembering.

A novel way to demonstrate the size of the state of Texas is to spread out a map of the union and stretch it sideways across Texas the longest way. Then, placing one end of the modified chart on Chicago, one will find that the other end will extend into either the Atlantic ocean or the gulf of Mexico.

The two largest counties in the United States are Custer county, Mont., and San Bernardino county, Cal. Each of these is a little more than 20,000 square miles in extent, and the states of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Delaware and New Jersey could be put inside the boundaries of either of them.

The smallest county in the union is Bristol county, R. I., which has only twenty-five square miles.

About fifty miles from Durango, Colo., there is a point where four states meet. Here by stepping a few feet in either direction one can walk in four different commonwealths in as many seconds. These commonwealths are the states of Colorado and Utah and the territories of New Mexico and Arizona.

A nearly parallel case is at Harpers Ferry, where the train stops a few minutes to allow the passengers to slight and enjoy a view which portrays lines to look into three states, Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia.

The highest and lowest elevations in this country are in California, within few miles of each other. The highest is Mount Whitney, 14,835 feet high, and the lowest is Death valley, about 250 feet below the level of the sea.

Two Oceans meet in Yellowstone park, so to speak because, whenever there is a shower in the vicinity and a certain small creek overflows, its waters spread out over the edge of the continental divide and pass into tributaries of rivers which flow to the Atlantic and to the Pacific.—Boston Globe.

POISON TREES.

They Are Found in Only Two Places in the World.

In only two places in the world, Queensland and the west coast of Africa, can there be found that most remarkable of nature productions, the Erythrophleum ivirkoheri or poison tree. Referring to this tree in speaking at a meeting of the Sydney National History society, A. Meston, formerly protector of aborigines in northern Queensland, says that when in full foliage it is one of the most beautiful trees in the world. The wood is elegantly grained and mottled by colors and peculiar streaks which readily distinguish it from any other known timber. It is extremely hard and tough, and the blocks of the Cape York peninsula use it for making their woomerans, with which they throw the spear. The tree bears long pale coloured leaves, which, like the leaves, are fatal to all animal life. Take a stomach of a dead goat or a dead sheep may show only three or four indigent of green leaves. All animals are blind before they die and remain blind if they recover. This tree killed sixteen of the Chillagoe company's camels. It killed some of the horses and cattle of the Jardine brothers in their expedition to Cape York in 1864. On one occasion it killed several thousand sheep on the gulf rivers. Occasionally an accidental Lucrezia Borgia dispenses of a sliver by mixing some crushed leaves in a mashed yam or pounded cuttlefish, and the unhappy Juliet can persuade some poor lost Romeo. Even imbibing the essence of the bark would be said to have a disastrous effect upon ladies who, in romantic phrase, are among those "who love their lords" necessitated to have recourse for firewood except in extreme cases of matrimonial infidelity.—London Standard.

Literally So.

Owing to a change for the worse in the character of the neighborhood a family which for many years had lived in the same house was compelled to sell it and move elsewhere. Their old home became a home for aged colored women. One day a member of the family happened to visit it. It was indeed different with the place. Being one of those who harbor a sense of humor, the former occupant is describing his impressions while among the aged colored women, with whom his old abode was filled, remarked:

"I may truthfully say the whole complexion of the place has changed."—New York Times.

Wise Old Guard.

To a guard at a gate in the Broad street station, Philadelphia, there recently came a certain individual with this query. "Have I time to say good-by to my wife, who is leaving on the New York train?"

"That, sir," responded the guard, with a polite smile, "depends on how long you have been married."—St. Louis Republic.

How Good News Spreads.

"I am 70 years old and have lived most of the time," writes H. F. Tolson, of Elizabethtown, Ky., "Everywhere I go I recommend Electric Bitters, because I owe my excellent health and vitality to them. Book Farming Pays.

The old-time farmers used to laugh at the book farmer, he who studied the earth and the products thereof scientifically, but here is a professor leaving an agricultural college with a salary of $...000 to take the management of a farm with a salary of $1,000. And he will probably make good, too. There is a lot of farming in books, and the man who is willing to admit it will make the most money out of his farm.

Ways of Cecil Rhodes.

Cecil Rhodes keeps his things on a big scale. Sometimes his gardener would ask him for two or three dozen peas or bushes or fruit trees. Rhodes would impatiently exclaim: "What's the good of ten dozen of anything? Count by hundreds and thousands, not by dozens. A thousand is the only way to produce any effect or make any money."

To Color Meerschaum.

An old time smoker who has colored many meerschaums says: "Take a piece of buckskin and sew it around the bowl to within half an inch of the top. Use good tobacco, smoke slowly about three times a day, keep the pipe clean with a brush and in about three months the pipe will be colored brown."

Tantalizing Ownership.

In a French village a citizen had upon his land a part of an old building containing two very beautiful windows. He was in debt and embarrassed and eagerly closed with the offer of a rich archaeologist, who bought them. Thereupon the government inspector, hearing of the bargain, arrived just in time to stop the mission from dishonoring the windows. "You cannot," he said to the villager, "sell antiquities, my man." "But, excellency, I have used the money and paid my creditors." The villager was in despair, but the official was unmoved. "That's all right," he said. "The money is safe. The windows are no longer yours. But the law won't move a stone of them. He can, however, come with a camp stool and sit down and look at the property as much as he likes."

Cham Wisdom.

The Sophists were a body of teachers in ancient Athens during the fourth and fifth centuries B. C., who gave instruction in any or all the higher branches of learning. Although they were not a philosophic sect and held no doctrines in common, the Sophists were nevertheless skeptics and inculcated a belief of uncertainty of all particular knowledge and, in fact, in the impossibility of all truth. Their two leading representatives were Protagoras and Gorgias. The Sophists were charged with bringing reasoning into contempt by casting uncertainty over the moral objective truths and in consequence were ridiculed and denounced by Aristophanes, Socrates and Plato. Aristotle defined a sophist as "a man who makes money by sham wisdom."

Poisonous Gas Geyser.

In the midst of the great Jamesi wilderness near Nahuel, Africa, is a big blowhole in the earth boiling poisonous gases. Surrounding this hole for many miles are piled bones of dead animals poisoned by this gas geyser. Dogs dragged to rows over the hole were killed in less than a minute. The gas has been found to be hydro-fluoric, coming from some volcanic death. The death trap has been fenced and filled with warnings.—New York Press.

Sprinkling a Trestle.

A novel fire trestle on the Klamath Lake railroad, in Oregon, is protected from fire in the dry season by a system of sprinklers which keep it continually wet. A pipe runs the entire length of a trestle near one of the tracks, and at short distances are holes through which the water is sprayed over the structure.—Popular Mechanics.

Peculiar Cause of Death.

The coroner at Hackney, England, mentioned to the jury the other day that he had just inquired into a recent death caused by a child of six weeks was ill, and the parents thinking it was going to died went to a clergyman to baptize it. He poured the water over its child's head, and medical evidence indicated that this so-called baptism was the cause of the death of the child of pneumonia.

Von Bulow of Gentle Nature.

When first Von Bulow was introduced to me I almost avoided him on account of the many stories of his irascibility, his erratic disposition, his offhand treatment of the public, his tendency toward sarcasms and many other crimes of this sort. On closer acquaintance with the great pianist I experienced some astonishment to find him a man of strong mind, yet gentle nature, enthusiastic, artistic to the finger tips and well bred, though of an exceedingly nervous temperament. Irascible he might have been at times, but I am sure that the provocation of it was always never always provoked by people, or by some sudden or unexpected shock, or even by some one Cons. WHAT ONE GRANGE HAS DONE.

Magnolia Grange, the Home Grange of National Lecturer Wilson in Illinois.

What one grange has accomplished it is possible for many others to do in the grange of which I wish to speak there has been almost unanimity for thirty-seven years now. It prospered well for a time, then the interest seemed to lag for awhile, when new courage and energy drove out the hold of the membership to change metles some way and interest became another and better life. Prosperity blessed the sessions.

For a few years the meetings were held in a schoolhouse, a very unfit place for a meeting of this character, as a vacant church was available it was decided to purchase it for a permanent home. After paying several hundred dollars toward the purchase price it was found necessary to make some special effort to complete the payment of the new house. The means used to rent five acres of land on which to plant potatoes to be cared for by the membership and sell said potatoes, to cancel the indebtedness, which was done, and a neat little home was raised in this manner. Then a grange fair was undertaken, first in a very small way with so premiums excepting ribbons to signify the superior quality of exhibits. This soon grew annually, and interest was manifested by many outside the grange and premiums were in most cases given for the best exhibits of every sort. Gradually the fair extended in duration of its term to between said friends. Each year the crop in quantity, quality, became a delightful feast, half decorate spring with fields and in a night the product of the labor of months is destroyed. This has dotted a not come to the grange, and it has caused the chosen country." A hundred of dollars has been spent in improvements, a fund that it may take years to make off.

Yet the grange does not, as a rule, when assaulting its idea, or during, with above time to fall from one a year, the grange is generally made enough to become substantial. Where everyone seems to has not a sufficient ren fund laid aside and this fund is used, the farmer does not exercise the evils of over confidence. He has money and defend to many outside the grange and seems are in most cases a source of fear and a feeling of security has been the cause of the downfall of many kings and statesmen. Caesar felt secure in Rome. He, alone of all the men of his own stamp. He was a star of which there was no fellow in the firmament. When Artemidorus attempted to warn him of his danger the contempt expression used was, "Security gives way to conspiracy." Carelessness, lack of caution or self-reliance just was enabling Caesar and the other conspirators to lift their hand against him. Cromwell's success was due to the fact that he never felt secure. He was always on his guard. Had Caesar been a Cromwell the dagger of the Cassius would never have reached him. Before the battle of Actiemnt the French could not hold their in merriment and frantic, the English in watching and praying.

"Secure in self."

The confident and over-hasty French the battle and Eastbrook plan of attack.

Despite their vast superiority in numbers the French through their sense of security, their over-confidence were defeated by the watchful English.

It is not necessary to go to ancient history for illustrations of the evil effect of over-confidence. A sense of security caused the British troops from loss of life and treasure, in South Africa. A sense of security had much to do with the defeat of the Russian fleet by the Japanese fleet.

In business life it is the same. The manufacturer is successful. He has built up a prosperous industry. He grows over-secure in his own skill. He spends extravagantly building inducers and purchasing pleasures that expensive. COL. ROOSEVELT OUT OF AFRICAN JUNGLE

Press Correspondents Welcome the Ex-President Back to Civilization on the White Nile.

NOTHING TO SAY ON POLITICS

Colonel Is in Good Health and Spirits After Facing Perils in the Dark Continent.

After a year in the African wilds, Colonel Roosevelt and his party hitched at Rosk on the White Nile, Saturday morning, and there on the threshold of civilization met a party of newspaper correspondents. The Roosevelt party were aboard the governmental steamer Dal, flying at their disposal by Sir Reginald Wingate, the British sirdar.

Colonel Roosevelt received the correspondents on board the Dal, which was tied to the right bank of the Nile. He is tanned brown as a cigar and is in excellent health. "I'm ready for anything," he said, with the old Roosevelt smile. But he did not smile when he answered almost the first question the correspondent put: "I have nothing to say and shall have nothing to say on American or European politics, on any political question or any phase or incident connected with politics. I shall hold to my interviews and anything purporting to be the source of an interview can be accepted as false. This applies during my entire stay in Europe." Asked if he expected a warm reception in Europe, he said: "I shall be glad to see my friends."

Colonel Roosevelt expressed delight that his son, Theodore, Jr., is engaged to marry Miss Eleanor Alexander, of New York. "She is the dearest girl!" he exclaimed, affectionately.

Colonel Roosevelt talked enthusiastically of his hunting adventures. He warmly thanked the courtesy of British and other officials. The facilities they afford him largely enabled him to complete his collection. The talk afoard the Dal revealed that Colonel Roosevelt had several narrow escapes in the jungle, in the last an elephant into which he had wounded charged him. He was trapped; there was no escape through the thick jungle. The infuriated beast's trunk almost grazed him. Then, at the last minute, Colonel Roosevelt fired. Lightly he hit a vital spot, the elephant dropped in its tracks.

Kermit Roosevelt is in perfect health and condition. So are the others of the party. F. J. Cunningham, the experienced African hunter, the prepared and conducted the expedition; A. J. Loring and Edmund Heller and Dr. Mearns.

The Dal towed a large barge laden with a thousand trophies of the plain and jungle. They constitute the largest collection of specimens ever sent out of Africa. The rare specimens include the first whole skin of the great white rhino, a giant eland, kudus, hartebeeste, a white-eared kob, a Grant's gazelle, a roan antelope, and a dik dik, the antelope about the size of a jack rabbit.

After leaving Kayo Mr. Roosevelt and his party will go to Khartoum, thence by steamer down the White Nile to Kosti, and then on the threshold of civilization met a party of newspaper correspondents. PEOPLE DEMAND END OF STRIKE

Call for Arbitration of Philadelphia Street Car Walkout.

The demand by the people for arbitration of the differences between the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company and its 4,000 or more striking employes has become insistent.

In Philadelphia and outside of it the call for mediatory measures is voiced. Everywhere it is recognized that the failure to arrive at any arbitral agreement is the only thing that stands by the way of a speedy ending of the general sympathetic strike in the city, which practically has paralyzed the city's industrial life and which the labor leaders made no secret threats to spread if the deadlock continued.

These threats, perhaps, were what most stood in the way of an amicable adjustment. The "central interests," which are a devised factor in the strike, dislike and resent the blat of coercion.

At a representative meeting of business men the other afternoon the call for arbitration was the keynote. Social financial, commercial and official bodies, and the federal authorities, as well as the military influence of the National Civic Federation, were appealed to to step in and end the difficulty. Governor Stuart at Harrisburg was petitioned by the labor men to take a hand in the controversy, and the city and State were invoked in resolutions, statements, and petitions to end the strike by peace conditions which Philadelphia daily finds grow more intolerable.

Peary, it is reported from London, that he is bringing proofs of his polar achievements with him and will make them public at a meeting which he is to address at Albert Hall under the auspices of the Royal Geographical Society. The explorer, whose good faith has been questioned by British newspapers, has the promise of a magnificent reception in London. Already, two months ahead of the date of his lecture, the applications for seats are sufficient to take fill the great hall. Members of the royal family are expected to be present.

MILLIONAIRE GOES TO COLLEGE

D. W. Field, Head of Vise Corporation, Enters Harvard Student.

Millionaire and president of a corporation, at the age of 45, Daniel Wolsey Field, of Brookline, Mass., has gone back to school to make up the education he lost in youth. He is the richest student in his own right at Harvard, and the oldest. He probably is the only Harvard student that has left a $100,000 salary to go back to college. He is starting as hard as he has been pitching ever since he left university. He is a shoe manufacturer in Brockton and employs from one to one hundred. Brockton, Mass., is his home.

A friend of $15,000 for the use of the Lawrence Scientific School of Harvard University, in which the visitors for the year 1909-1910 authorize the president to confer the degree of Doctor of Science, was announced at the annual meeting of the board of overseers held at Cambridge.

COAL STRIKE IS SEEN.

Walkout of Miners in Bituminous Fields Declared Certain.

A general strike of coal miners on April 1 throughout the bituminous fields is declared a certainty. More than 200,000 men in four states will be involved in the controversy and the struggle is expected to be more protracted than any mining dispute in recent years. Railroads are now taking practically all the output of the Illinois mines and stating it about their tracks in anticipation of the suspension. Manufacturing interests are offering increased prices for coal and many of them are under contracts with the railroads which they are required to fill.

The approximate number of men who will lay down their picks at the end of this month is as follows:

Illinois	75,000
Western Pennsylvania	65,000
Ohio	45,000
Indiana	20,000
Total	205,000

If the United Mine Workers of America adhere to the resolutions adopted in their annual convention that no district can sign an agreement or resume operations until every district is satisfied, the number of men will exceed the estimate given, as central Pennsylvania, Iowa, Michigan and Indiana, the districts in West Virginia are organized will be included in the suspension.

MILLIONAIRES AS TAX DODGERS.

D. R. Francis One of Several Men Who Have Escaped Their Share.

Warrants were issued in St. Louis for the arrest of David R. Francis, former Governor of Missouri, Henry S. Priest, John Scullin, Thomas L. Sullivan, and other millionaires, charging violation of the law in failing to list him and will make their books of all their taxable property. Deputy sheriffs are now in Chicago, New York, Seattle, Alton, and Priest. The men were permitted to sign their recognizances for bond. Francis grew indignant and refused to sign a bond for his appearance in Louisiana. Already two months ahead of the date of his lecture, he explained he was not sufficient to tolve fill the great hall. Members of the royal family are expected to be present.

IN A NUTSHELL

Time of the grass sheep grew shamefaced to the West was added at Albany. One Bill heard it weighed 2,300 pounds and dressed 1,100 pounds.

According to government reports the total value of the horses, mules, milk cows, cattle, sheep and swine in the United states was on Jan. 1, 1910, $2,276,000,000. This is an increase of $413,000,000 since Jan. 1, 1909.

Parents near Marshall, Mo., complain that wolves have been very troublesome during the last winter. They killed twenty-eight pigs recently. The former and others have suffered losses of hogs, pigs and poultry.

The country's honey crop for last year's estimated at $25,000,000. There are 5,000,000 people who keep bees and the product of their hives was sufficient to fill a train of cars long enough to reach from New York to Buffalo.

The Denver City Tramway Company has increased the rate of wages of conductors and motormen 1 cents an hour. The new scale will make the minimum wage 24 cents an hour while men in the service for ten years will receive 26 cents.

At New Richmond, Wis., the new rural independent telephone company has been incorporated under the name of St. Croix Valley Telephone company, and capitalized at $25,000. Over 300 of the necessary amount already having been subscribed. The plan is to make this new company the nucleus for the clearing house for all the independent telephone companies up and down the St. Croix valley.

Total receipts closing up the $82,000,000 merger of the four great car companies in the south division of China are have been completed and the Chicago, Nine and Connecting Railways Company become a fact.

ROOSEVELT ARRIVES AT KHARTOUM, EGYPT

Meets His Wife and Daughter and They Are Given Possession of Palace.

ANCHORS TO FINISH HIS BOOK

Ex-President's Return to Civilization Marked by Presence of Rulers and Local Grandees.

Theodore Roosevelt has arrived in civilization. It was 2 o'clock Monday when he landed on the steps of the station at Khartoum, still adorned with the khaki garb he toddlered in the jungle. This was due in the non-arrival of his clothes from Cairo.

As is characteristic of all Roosevelt homecomings, he arrived at this point was on time and the details were phenomenal. The ex-President got a glimpse of the struggle for supremacy and became immediate upon the actual approach of Colonel Roosevelt, while the ruffled Nile was as smooth as a mirror. Upon his business arrival the Dal became and British gunboats which had served through the Kitchener campaign were decorated with bunting and flags in honor of this American citizen, the brilliant white sands and cool green date palms fringing the shores, backed by stately buildings and luxurious gardens, forming a gentle setting of no mean worth.

Desirous of keeping his promise to finish his book, Colonel Roosevelt arrived in this capital of Egypt, which is the favorite resting place of the surfeited hero of Khartoum, the Omdurman city. When he last sentence of the book had been penned he followed it by some rapidly distributed writing numerous letters. The Colonel found the greater part of all his mail made up of absurd requests for trophies and other things impossible to do or consider.

At 3 p. m. the vessel leisurely steamed down the White Nile, passing Omdurman, the historic scene of the Khalifa's downfall. With Egyptian, English and American flags flying at the confluence of the White and Blue Nile, Sister Pashas and Wingate, resplendent with gold decorations, welcomed the colonel.

At the palace a brave array of officers as a guard of honor flashed the sunset over the landing place. After an informal presentation to the leading officials of Khartoum, Colonel Roosevelt went to the railroad station to meet Mrs. Roosevelt and his daughter, after which he returned to the palace, where he dined with the privacy of a private dinner party. The luxury of dress clothes for the first time in twelve months, the carry' tops of civilization having arrived. The palace was practically given over to the Roosevelts. It is a historic, yellow building, and is surrounded by an ancient Turkish fort for the first time in its history.

DEAD IN $800,000 HOTEL FIRE

Heart of the Jamestown, N. Y., Business District Riddled by Flames.

A large square in the center of the business district of Jamestown, N. Y., was a mass of smouldering ruins Monday morning as the result of the worst fire in the history of the city. The loss will be between $500,000 and $600,000. The Hotel Hanson, John, captain of fire police; crushed by falling wall. The falling of telegraph and telephone poles put an end to the work of wires.

The flames broke out in the Gokey building the other night and supposed by was set in a basement fire. Early next morning with the loss of one life and $100,000 property. Twenty-four hours later the fire was still burning, embers into fresh flames. What was left of the Gokey building looks like timber and almost before the firemen reached the scene the Dolly building was found to be on fire. A wind made the firemen helpless and the inferno spread swept across the 120 foot wide street to the Sherman house, one of the finest hotels in western New York. There were 125 guests in the hotel, but all escaped unhurt and most of their personal property was saved.

At 5 o'clock in the morning, after it had burned itself out, there was under control. The Banes communicated to Erie Hall, occupied by the Hipps Company, which was destroyed, as was the W. S. Bridges Block, occupied by a house and cabinetmaker.

Gen. Bradley, Union Hero, Dead.

Brig. Gen. L. P. Bradley, U. S. A., retired, died at his home in Spokane, Wash., of paralysis. He was 78 years old. Gen. Bradley served in the Union army throughout the Civil War, being brevetted Major, and after the war was engaged in Indian fighting.

Boy Taken as Counterfeiter.

The finding of a counterfeiting outfit in a cellar under a hotel in Hyattsville, Md., led to the arrest of Willie Wilson, 14 years old, a bell boy, who claims to be the son of a wealthy stockman of Snyder, Texas.

Two Children Burn to Death.

Charles, 3 years old, and Catherine, 1 year old, children of William Quinn, were burned to death in the destruction of their home at Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Three Children Killed.

An exploding oil heater in the residence of Ingvar Willis, near Gloucester, Mass., caused a fire that suffocated three children as they lay in their beds asleep. The victims are Lewis Wagner, 8 years old, Ethel Wagner, aged 10, and Grace Dunbar, aged 12. The three children were put to bed and left while the other Wagner were out shopping.

President Schwab, of the Bethlehem Steel Company, announced that the demands of the striking steel workers have all been denied.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL
CHICAGO.

H. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of Chicago trade says:

"The volume of payments through the banks sustains high levels and is a fascinating study of the expanding activity in commerce. Further gains also appear in spring, and this has induced better borrowing for both trade and investment.

"Current operations show steady progress, aided by more seasonable weather, the demand for bank construction and wider demands in the leading industrial and distributive branches. Movements of grain, live stock and provisions exhibit declines, but the gross earnings of the Chicago steam roads rise, and there are heavy forwardings of finished outputs, raw supplies and general merchandise.

"Orders for machinery, equipment are now issued and important tonnages closed for rails, pig iron, metal products, cars and miscellaneous steel shapes. Building operations assure much work, contracts are being placed while additional machinery and hands are required in many industrial lines. Dealings in the leading retail lines are stimulated by the attractive exhibits of outlay and wear.

"Bank clearings, $12,156,414, exceed largely above the face, being nearly 30 per cent in advance of the corresponding week in 1909 by 13.4 per cent and compare with 1908, 1907 and 1906. Failures reported in the Chicago district number twenty-one, as against twenty-one last week, twenty-two and thirty in 1908. Those with liabilities over $5,000 are four, as against three last week, ten in 1909 and eleven in 1908."

NEW YORK.

Trade reports continue to display a certain degree of irregularity, a tendency which is more pronounced in the East, parts of the nearby South and in scattered sections of the West. Yet, on the whole, trade at a majority of points is probably better than it was a year ago. The South as a whole reporting improvement, the Northwest, staging up in good shape and the far West being good, with the Southwest satisfactory. Mere favorable weather conditions appear to be the chief influence making for improvement, but, on the other hand, the poor condition of country roads tends to deter anything like a free movement. Stagnation in the other request.

Business failures for the week ending with March 10 were 226 as against 183 last week, 234 in the like week of 1909, 176 in 1908, 186 in 1907 and 187 in 1906.—Bradstreet's.

Wm. Dunlap of Sickles Clubs Wife and Father-in-law.

In the little town of Sickles about noon the other day William Dunlap, 24 years old, clubbed his wife, 22 years old, and his father-in-law, Julius Peet, his own hired off with the same blow on the head. While there were no eye witnesses, it is supposed that Peet undertook to protect his daughter from the frenzied man. Dunlap turned upon him and struck him down while Peet was attempting to rise, the blow crushing Peet's head and probably instantly killed him, as he died only a years old, and small for his age, has single-handed conducted nearly 100 thefts during the last four years. His last two offenses were to rob his own father and steal from the store of his employer, a hardware merchant.

Dunlap's tools and equipment are now issued and important tonnages closed for rails, pig iron, metal products, cars and miscellaneous steel shapes. Political Comment.

The President and Wall Street.

The impossibility of segregating good men from bad men in politics has led some people in Wall street to remark that President Taft would call them all bad, and suddenly there was panicky feeling on the exchange. The fact that quickly turning out of a month after the President's message, and not at the close of its delivery to Congress, and the further fact that the administration has made no move tending to disturb business in the interim, might show that the scare was manufactured in the very place where executive action was said to be most feared.

This is not uncommon in Wall street, which is divided into two bitter camps, one of which profits as much by depressing prices as the other does by enhancing them. That the President of the United States, or anyone else, could adopt a human policy that would please both of these interests is not conceivable. The President has adopted his policy for Wall street, nor does Wall street make the inability for the President. He makes no pretense.

All that the President has said on the subject, he has said in his message. That is to the effect that it is the duty and purpose to direct an investigation by the Department of Justice, through the staff of individual companies with regard to which there may be a reasonable ground for suspicion that they have been organized for a purpose and with intent to violate the anti-trust laws.

The President in this is following the lead of the federal courts in anti-trust cases. In these the court has held that the restraints of trade must be direct and not incidental. If they were but incidental, it is presumed that the company was not organized for the purpose of violating the anti-trust act. If it has been organized for such a purpose, the purpose would appear more prominent than the incidental effect of its business.

The President did not announce a design to investigate corporations that were doing business in a decent and fair way, even if their history might disclose a technical violation of the law. Such a policy would be the acme of consuming the Sherman act. It would be rights in reality, and a something that will allow business to proceed. But the Sherman act is the same as more than Justice Holmes did, when he declared from the bench that the law prohibited restraints of trade, and shall cease, nor any more than another law, because it is severe. It may be said that it may be held that because a business is large it is amenable to the law, and that it is not a crime." Decker, a president of Au Sable Township, homesteaded a piece of land last year, and he has allowed a number of the officials of the land office at Marquette that same was open for entry. BOY'S CORN CLUB

Something More on the Subject—The Scope and Purpose of the Proposition—The Question of Age.

The Van Pelt Boy's Corn Club proposition, of which we spoke last week, is a project that is really worth promoting, as an adjunct of the general work of development which just now occupies the attention of the progressive people of western and northern Michigan. The feature of the efforts of the Western Michigan Development Bureau is that of education among that class of farmers who require enlightenment. This work is done both by literature and practical demonstration, and there is abundant proof that it is effective.

If there are farmers of mature age who are not up to modern scientific standards in the prosecution of their vocation—and there are many such—the lesson is plainly writ. Teach the boys, for the benefit of the next generation. The Boy's Corn Club constitutes a chasm in agriculture between the terms of school. Moreover, it will be of the nature of a correspondence school as well as a season of field work, for the government agrees to be its teacher and Mr. Van Pelt its sponsor and friend. It goes without saying that the farmer boy is more susceptible of knowledge anyway, more than the dyed-in-the-wool, shell back farmer man, but the farmer man has regard for the farmer boy, and will encourage and help him.

But Mr. Van Pelt has failed to cover one essential feature of the proposition—that of age eligibility. There are chaps of twenty-one who yet claim to be boys, and litter your coin who think they are men. The fault both ways should be clearly fixed—say boys of the ages of twelve to sixteen, inclusive.

We print below further information from the Outlook article referred to last week, and recommend a careful study of it, in connection with that already given:

There were approximately twelve thousand boys in the clubs last year under the direct supervision and instruction of Dr. Knapp's office. Of course there were some clubs in the south not directly affiliated with his organization which were doing good work. The coming year it is expected that there will be 25,000 in these clubs, and that all will be directly affiliated. Are there not great possibilities in the movement? A great deal is being said upon the subject of "country life" and the fact that the best boys are leaving the farm. There are three essential things which must be demonstrated to the average bright American boy to make him stay on the farm: first, that there are possibilities for as great or greater income on the farm, with the expenditure of the same amount of energy and brain power, as in the pursuits which the city offers; second, that farm life may be made attractive and robbed of its and thus drudgery; and, third, that the honors to be attained by the farmer and the recognition given him are as great as those of the city. It is to the first of these propositions that Dr. Knapp is directing his energy and thought. With increased yield and the practice of a fair amount of business method, a man on the farm can have such an income that the other two may be added to the first. Growing corn costs something, and in order to raise a man in the scale of civilization you must increase his earning power. The lessons of the possibilities of yield, the possibilities of economy, the possibilities of income from the tilling of the soil, is the lesson sought to be impressed through the Boys' Corn Clubs, and with this comes the wonderful attention of an interest in the things which concern the farm and the making of them a source of interest to the boy.

Saved a Soldier's Life.

Fearing death from shot and shell in the great war was more agreeable to J. A. Stone, of Kemp, Tex., than facing it from what doctors said was consumption. "I contracted a stubborn cold" he writes, "that developed a cough, that stuck to me in spite of all remedies for years. My weight fell down to 130 pounds. Then I began to use Dr. King's New Discovery, which completely cured me. I now weigh 178 pounds." THE SHAKSPEARE CLUB

The Annual Banquet at the Paddock Home Last Thursday Evening.

The annual banquet of the Ladies Shakespeare Club is an event anticipated by the ladies and their husbands with eager expectation. The fourth in regular order fell upon the evening of St. Patrick's day, thus giving rise to a double celebration, and in no wise forming an exception to former delightful occasions of mirth and jollity.

The home of Mr. Robt. and Mrs. Paddock radiated hospitality to the club and its guests, a joyful welcome being accorded each arrival. When the honor arrived and the large company, a charming music furnished by an orchestra composed of sons and daughters of members of the club, seated themselves at the table with jest and laughter, the scene was both animated and gay. The large table, extending through the house, was still finally laid with silver and glass and decked with flowers.

The menu left nothing to be desired to tempt the appetite or please the palate of the epicure as a nearer inspection will make clear.

THE COUNTY FINANCES

County Treasurer Lewis Tells Us Something of Present Conditions and Future Prospects.

County Treasurer Lewis gives us information that indicates a slow but certain extrication of the county from the embarrassment of the $43,000 debt that we have been burdened with.

He has, this spring, cleaned up $10,829 65 of what has been known as the "old debt," which means that portion incurred up to one year ago, some of it running back as far as 1903. Last year the tax on the assessed valuation was ten mills, or one percent. From a somewhat careful review of present conditions he is of the opinion that eight mills this year will meet demands and that the following year seven mills will wipe out what remains of the county's present obligations. He is confident that after that, with a reasonable estimate of increased valuation, five mills on the dollar will be sufficient to run the county.

Asked if there was a noticeable decrease of expense under local option, Mr. Lewis answered emphatically "Yes." He freely expressed the opinion that with a comprehensive view of present conditions as a reasonable basis for a forecast of the future, he regards local option as of great benefit to the county.

He is of the opinion, however, that one year's experience is too little from which to judge. Even two years under local option will not be especially intelligible to expenses for county poor, but that in ten years the county will be greatly the gainer by the absence of saloons.

CHAPTER XV.—(Continued.)

An dirty and disreputable as ever, Hatteress, getting up but little dirty bundle, made his appearance on the threshold of the library, endeared to the Major's heart. When the door was closed behind him, and he had to allow to now show to whom it was, that he evening, the shrivel-assassin, leaning one foot in the other, shuffled to the sideboard, and civil and blinded, as with the shadow of a bat, fluttered an author cousin of his skin. Jem, with the stillness on a child's consciousness, lay awkward within him locked strictly of the tactile and whatever and questioned this shaggy, as unusual he were talking to a wooden-like man and some one, to the part of Meg. Left by the Major, the part of the examination to the Major, Jem, with the nervous hocks and pasted legs to the with nervous hocks and pasted legs to every word which fell from the tangled lips. The Major of the man from which fled level so deeply and inflicted, terrified, the inquest upon her being heard, and as a tinsel to his memory, she was was to punish his assassin. This at present, influenced by the views of the Major, she began to waver in her opinions regarding the guilt of the week-bright stranger, who stood regarding seriously at the doorway.

"Well, my man, what do you want?" demanded Jem, commanding in the authoritative manner.

"Hatteress, sir. My father was thief, an' my mother she was white, an' they weren't married. I was brought up in Hatteress, so I look that name of dad, and the rest of my relations."

"How do you get your living?"

"I beg—" said Hatteress, rumbly, "And mind I can't get muffin, I might."

"I am sure of that," remarked Jem, taking the shilling. "Well, what do you want? I'm busy."

"I didn't. I found it!"

"Where?"

"At Mission Hollis' place."

Jem started, and looked sharply at the old man, who, in all appearance, was unknowing that he was with all possible comfort.

"Do mean capitol, man," he said, sternly. "What do you mean by Mrs. Hallet's house, or grounds?"

"The grounds, near the gate. The day after th' young gen'man was killed."

"And why didn't you give it up to the police?"

"I wanted money for it, I did, an' they wouldn't give me tin to me for finding it. Sir, I'm poorer to Meg. The bout of pretty things, an' I sold it here, but she didn't give me tin."

"No," said Meg, speaking for the first time, "because I did not know it you had stolen it."

"Stolen, Meg, I did," growled Hatteress, becoming restive under the constant reproach of the word. "I found it, I tell you, in the grass of Mission Hollis' place."

"Inside or outside?" asked Jem, "or outside on the road?"

"Inside; just among the grass, was I coming up to the house, to ask Miss Meg an' I saw that little shiny in the grass. I jump and picked it up, I did. I knowed as the perfice wanted it, because I saw him blow it under Meg's hat as perfice wouldn't give me tin. I

AN EASTER MYSTERY.

AN EASTER FLOWER
WHICH FLEW AWAY.

Sunday School LESSON

BY REV. D. L. MOODY.

Subject for March 27.

Golden Text: "Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people."—Matt. 4:23.

LESSON I.

John, the forerunner of Jesus.—Matt. 3:1-12.

Golden Text: "The voice of one crying in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord, make His paths straight."

John, the great evangelist to the church, preached two works of grace.

LESSON II.

The Baptism and Temptation of Jesus.—Matt. 3:13-17; 4:1-11. "In that He hath suffered being tempted, He is able to succor them that are tempted" (Heb. 2:18). The temptations prepared for the sanctified.

LESSON III.

The Beginning of His Galilean Ministry.—Matt. 4:18-25.

Golden Text: "The people which sat in darkness saw a great light."—Matt. 4:16.

Jesus, the great example of holiness, was about doing good. So do holy people.

LESSON IV.

True Blessedness.—Matt. 5:1-16.

Golden Text: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."—Matt. 5:8.

The characteristics of holiness.

LESSON V.

Some Laws of the Kingdom.—Matt. 5:17-26; 6:19-34.

Golden Text: "Be ye therefore perfect even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."—Matt. 5:48.

The righteousness of perfect love exists; that of the Pharisees and Pharisees.

LESSON VI.

Almsgiving and Prayer.—Matt. 6:1-15.

Golden Text: "Take heed that ye do not your righteousness before men, to be seen of them."—Matt. 6:1 (R. V.).

The great prayer for holiness—Hallowed by Thy name.

LESSON VII.

Worldliness and Trust.—Matt. 6:19-34.

Golden Text: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matt. 6:33.

We cannot trust in money and God also.

LESSON VIII.

The Golden Rule.—Temperance Lessons.—Matt. 7:1-12.

"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets."—Matt. 7:12.

Be merciful and be preserved from all kinds of censoriousness.

LESSON IX.

False and True Discipleship.—Matt. 7:13-29.

Golden Text: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."—Matt. 7:21-29.

The parable of any religion that does not enable us to keep the divine commandments is a deception and fraud.

LESSON X.

Jesus, the Healer.—Matt. 8:2-17.

Golden Text: "Himself took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses."—Matt. 8:17.

Holiness is compassionate towards the diseased.

LESSON XI.

Two Mighty Miracles.—Matt. 8:23-24.

Golden Text: "What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him?"—Matt. 8:27.

Jesus is Lord of all.

LESSON XII.

A Paralytic Healed and Healed.—Matt. 9:1-13.

Golden Text: "The Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins."—Matt. 9:6.

Spiritual healing transcends bodily cures.

CHURCH AND CLERGY.

Rev. Lawrence Sonnis of the Delaware Avenue Methodist Church of Buffalo has given up his city pastorate to take a less prominent business and professional rank, a number of people being in the same case for instance, if a man can succeed in business and be a Christian, and, if so, how he can make his life to its interpretation. He wants to know if they think that a Christian in business or politics can consistently do evil that some may come and whether Christianity is on the increase. Also why so many men stay away from church, what are the most destructive sins practiced, and if organized society believes in conversation or have recurrence for religious illusions.

Efforts are being made to bring the membership of the University of Wisconsin, of M. E. church, to Madison.

The appointment of a force of men for the installation of an organ for worship has been made in the chapel of the Minneapolis University of the Algonquin Methodist Episcopal church, St. Paul. It was decided that for the present the services will be in charge of Bethesda hospital, and that permission be given to the public to use it. It will be made for the next conference by extending the chapel.

Rt. Rev. Bishop James Scarborough, of the diocese of Los Angeles, is the establishment of an agricultural manual training school for the benefit of the orphans of the diocese, has purchased a new Bible for the use and more practical education of classes of the Catholic church in the Northwest.

Dr. R. M. Carroll's annual presentation, in the Christian Advocate, of denominational statistics shows the state of all the churches in 1900 to be 6,893 members, 1,000 churches and 1,000 communicants. The totals are 165,112 members, 15,000 churches, 25,677,259 communicants. Of these 14,672,000 are Roman Catholics.

The Essence of Prejudice.

The chief occupation of democrats and mugwumps the past six months has been to damn Joe Cannon, speaker of the house of representatives. The head and front of his offending has been the enforcement of rules which the house itself established. Last week the speaker was shorn of much of his power by what was equivalent to an overwhelming vote of the house, democrats and half-breeds are happy once more.

Charles E. Littlefield, former Congressman from Maine, who is now practicing law in New York, told the Long Island bankers and their wives who partook of their annual dinner at the Hotel Astor lately, that in his opinion the enthusiasm displayed by any community over the downfall of "Cannonism" was in inverse ratio to the knowledge of that community regarding the subject.

"The rules governing the house of representatives," said he, "are the result of an evolution itself. James G. Cannon has probably had as little to do with the making of those rules as any member of the audience. No man can truthfully say that the present speaker hasn't been more humane and considerate in the exercise of his authority under them than any of the last three speakers, and I include in the latter, of course, Speaker Reed and Speaker Henderson."

A Straw For Autrim County.

At a recent mass meeting a number of Jackson business men gave talks in Grand Rapids showing that business had not been hurt in Jackson under local option. We give the following from the Grand Rapids Herald's account of the visit of the Jackson men's visit:

The president of the Jackson real estate board, J. A. Campbell, was the next speaker and met every phase of question fairly. He said, "We were told previous to the voting out of the saloon that there would be vacant stores, increase of taxes, lack of city improvements and many other things. But I can safely say that they have failed to make good in every one of their arguments. Today Jackson has not one vacant store. Did you suddenly come to Jackson to rent a store you could not get one immediately for we now have filled applications for stores on our books. Property is not lower. In fact prices are in almost every case higher. During the time since the saloons have been voted out you now houses have been built and more money was spent last year on public improvement than has been before in a single year in the history of the city. All of the Jackson banks have more accounts and greater deposits, especially from the laboring men."

Political and Otherwise.

The state land department is planning maps which will show the state and national forestry reserves in the state. The government owns nearly 94,961 acres and the state about 285,320 acres. It is proposed to make change and to have the new holdings on the big section as far as possible.

Chief Justice H. M. Montgomery is used quite a lengthy statement to the people of Michigan regarding his position and for withdrawing from the gubernatorial race, and while he said he was pleased with the new field opened to him, it was with deep regret that he left Michigan.

March 19th was Lincoln Club day at Traverse City. Grand Traverse county, and the republicans of Leelanau and Antrim counties were out in full force. The attendance was the best the club has ever had and interest was very keen.

Amos S. Musselman, the third gubernatorial candidate, is not in the running with Pat Kelley and Chase S. Osborn when it comes to shining at banquets and as a result his name does not appear on the program at these "love-feasts" quite as often.

Notice.

With reference to the Audit of the books of the city of Charlevoix, which has been running the past year and was completed Feb. 8, 1910. The report is somewhat lengthy and would require considerable expense for publication. Same is now on file in the office of the city clerk. Anyone interested in the publication of same may call at the clerk's office and do so.

By order of Finance Committee.

An Awful Eruption of a volcano excites brief interest, and your interest in skin eruptions will be as short, if you use Bucklen's Arnica Salve, instead cure. From the worst burn, ulcers, or fever sores all soon healed by it. Best for burns, cuts, bruises, sore throat, hands, chilblains and piles. It gives instant relief. 25c at F. G. Hines & Co.

FOR SALE—4½ acres well adapted for fruits or gardening purposes—one mile from Court House. Also fruit farms, apply to H. S. HAMAHA.

Northern Michigan

Harry Dyer, the contractor who built the Charlevoix carriage factory has secured the contract for the new school house to be built at Northport at a price of $10,000.

Better than one hundred acres of land in the vicinity of Northport, Leelanau county, Western Michigan, will be set to fruit trees this spring. The greater part of the acreage will be devoted to cherries and apples.

Elk Rapids special: The gale of Sunday and Monday broke up the ice considerably in the east arm of Grand Traverse bay. The moving ice cut off the pilng for about 40 feet from the end of the city dock and has badly damaged it. It is feared that when the ice goes out the dock will be practically ruined.

A Rapid City firm that has a reputation for cutting the corners exceedingly close, devised a plan to model the government out of half of their postage bill. The way they went about it was to write their letters upon newspapers which they mailed for one cent, while the postage on letters is two cents. The government, however, became aware of their scheme with the result that they were caught in the act and brought into court, where they paid a fine of $60.

The editor of the Bear Lake Beacon in his issue of March 18, 1910, says: "The time has evidently arrived when the farmers and fruit growers of western Michigan should awaken to a realization of the great loss which they are sustaining every year by not making the most of the advantages which nature has bestowed upon them. Indeed, Leelanau, Grand Traverse, Antrim, Oceana and Manistee counties are manifesting great interest in this matter and the indications are that there is to be a general movement in those counties toward better work in fruit growing and marketing.

Hoyne Journal: At last night's council meeting the most important piece of business which was transacted was the matter of submitting the proposition to bond the city for the sum of $20,000 for street improvement to the voters at the spring election. The question of another $20,000 for improvement and extension of the Water Works system is still in the hands of the board of public works and the council is waiting for their recommendation. A committee was appointed last night to confer with the school board relative to the purchase of the building and site of the old court house property. This is wanted for city hall purposes.

Bellaire Independent: Mrs. George VanOrden and little son left last Saturday for Washington, D. C., after a lengthy visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Owen. Mr. VanOrden has been stationed in Panama for some time past with the U. S. troops. Recently he did some very valuable work in the military service, for which he was highly complimented by his superior officers, and they reported this to the secretary of war, which resulted in Mr. VanOrden being ordered to report in Washington in person, and it is generally understood that he will be given a high official position in the Marine Corps in recognition of his good work on the isthmus.

East Jordan Enterprise: Hay, the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. E. N. Clink, passed away with the setting of the sun Saturday evening, March 12th, after a long brave struggle with the "great white plague." The dread disease fastened upon him some months ago and in spite of everything that loving care could do, instead of a winter spent with his mother in New Mexico, he failed gradually until the end came last Saturday evening. The funeral took place from the Presbyterian church Tuesday afternoon and was attended by a large gathering of family (friends) and neighbors, who paid their last tribute to one who had won the esteem and love of many during his life of only twenty five years.

Hoyne Journal: L. F. Knowles has consented to help the local option forces out in some of the campaigns that are being waged this spring. He has been engaged for several weeks in Antrim, Otsego and Presque Isle counties and will give them what time he can spare from now on until election day. Judge Harris is also giving considerable time to help out our neighboring counties in the interest of the dry cause. These gentlemen are able to give some facts from personal observation that ought to be of value to the workers in those places where the fight is raging. Hoyne City and Charlevoix county can certainly furnish an object lesson on local option that ought to convince any one that it is a good thing.

Hoyne Citizen: Deputy Warden Stanford some time ago learned from the farmers up around Ironton that some of the foreigners who had settled there were engaged in shooting quail and other birds that they could get. He accordingly set to work to find out about it and on a trip over that way yesterday secured evidence sufficient so that a warrant was sworn out before Judge Hammond, and Officer Hanson went over and arrested a Bohemian named Michael Skiscar, a resident of the township of Marion, who lives beyond Ironton. He was charged with shooting quail and it was alleged by neighbors that a whole flock which were wintering near his place, has disappeared. He admitted shooting a couple of them and the court said $25 and costs which made the total $32. At first he said he had no money but when Jos. Kotesky, who had been called in to act as interpreter, informed him that the alternative was a trip to prison, he unlimbered and pulled out his wallet and paid up. The report is that he has been shooting robins, crows and everything that comes in the reach of his gun and uses them for food.

Traverse City Record: Mrs. Mark A. Churchill, charged with the larceny of $200 belonging to Mrs. John Carson, of Elk Rapids, appeared before Judge Swinger this noon, waived examination and was bound over to the Marquette circuit court. Not having furnished bail she was remanded to jail. Mr. Churchill, a veterinary who has been working at Petoskey, arrived last night and was much concerned over the incarceration of his wife in the county jail, becoming quite excited in the recorder's court when under sheriff Thauern started back to jail with Mrs. Churchill, declaring that there was no evidence to hold her. When it was explained that she had waived examination and was bound over to circuit court and that her bail of $500 had not been furnished, he saw that he was powerless to interfere with the law. Mrs. Churchill had retained anattorney but dismissed him, stating that as she had been deprived of the use of money she could not employ counsel. This may cut quite a figure in her case, as it is quite probable that she will be found to be indigent and be given an attorney at the state's expense to defend her. It is the opinion of many that she was not guilty of stealing $200 from Mrs. John Carson by the jury in circuit court last night, the verdict being returned at 6 o'clock last night, after a short deliberation. Mrs. Churchill took the conviction philosophically, maintaining the calm demeanor which has characterized her actions all through the trying ordeal of her arrest and trial. The woman is alleged to be a noted Chicago crook, and the police of that city are after her. [Ironton's note.]

THE AGILE ESKIMO.

Habit Enables Him to Scale Ice Clad Heights With Ease.

"In all my experience I had never encountered a rougher, more difficult country in which to hunt than in Ellesmere Land," writes Harry Whitney in Outing. "Ordinarily I should have believed there mountain sides, with walls of smooth rock, sheathed with a crust of hard ice and snow, quite unscalable.

"In places they were almost perpendicular. Rarely did they offer a crevice to serve as foot or hand hold, and jutting points and firm set boulders were too widely scattered to be of much help.

"In this his native land the Eskimo has a decided advantage over the white hunter. His lifetime of experience has taught him to scale these ice clad heights with a nimbleness and ease that are astounding. He is quite fearless, and even the mountain sheep is no his superior as a climber.

"As if by magic and with little apparent effort the two Eskimos flew up the slippery walls, far outstripping me. How they did it I shall never know. Now and again I was forced to cut steps in the ice or I should inevitably have lost my footing and been buried downward several hundred feet to the rocks beneath.

"I was astonished even at my own progress, and when I paused to glance behind me I felt a momentary pride. But there was no tarrying luck, and one look robbed me of any desire to indulge in it.

"The Eskimos have no conception of distance. He is endowed with certain artistic instincts which enable him to draw a fairly good map of a coast line with which he is thoroughly familiar, but he cannot tell how far it is from one point to another. Often when Eskimos told me a place we were bound for was very close at hand I discovered that we were far from it. This they are never sure of and can not indicate.

"The Eskimos have a white man strung to death from every point of view. They not only can go to sleep promptly, but sleep soundly and well as they travel when circumstances permit. They get entenamed, too, by eating hard frozen walrus and seal meat or blubber. This I could never do, for it is so strong in flavor that it invariably nauseated me, though I did succeed very well with raw hare or deer's meat which I had it."

Iridium.

Iridium is a hard, brittle, silver white metallic element belonging to the platinum group, discovered by Tennant in 1803, sometimes found native and nearly pure, but generally combined with osmium. It is, with the exception of osmium, the heaviest metal known and is used for pen points, contact points in telegraphy and points of metallic implements which is wear. Its specific gravity is 22.4.

His Great Loss.

"Well, Gaggs," accosted the farmer as he greeted one of his laborers one fine frosty day, "and we did get on best year?"

"Aye, mister," was the reply, "it was a bad year for I. I did lose my mother, I did lose my canary, and I did lose my dog. And it war a good fog too."—London News.

Self Protection.

"I was driven to it. Now the barber won't try to sell me any tonic or hair restorer."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Pain in Heart
"For two years I had pain in my heart, back and left side. Could not draw a deep breath or lie on left side, and any little exertion would cause palpitation. Under advice I took Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy and Nervine. I took about thirteen bottles, am in better health than I ever was, and have gained 14 pounds."
MRS. LILLIE THOMAS, Upper Sandusky, Ohio.
For many years Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy has been very successful in the treatment of heart troubles, because of its tonic effect upon the heart nerves and muscles. Even in severe cases of long standing it has frequently prolonged life for many years after doctors had given up all hope, as proven by thousands of letters we have received from grateful people.
Dr. Miles' heart remedy is sold by all druggists. If the first bottle fails to benefit, your druggist will return your money.

Strange Diet Advocates.

Some years ago in Albany, N. Y., a member of a distinguished family gave a rat luncheon. The rats had been fattened in a granary; or was it a malt house? Then there is the entomologists in France, the enthusiast who has published a cook book containing only recipes for preparing insects for the table. He recommends especially a cockroach soup.

Substitute for Gold.

In France a substitute for gold has been adopted, by combining 94 parts of copper and six parts of antimony and adding a little manganese carbonate to increase the weight. It is said that this alloy can be drawn, wrought and soldered, much like true gold, and that it also receives and retains a golden polish. It is worth about 25 cents a pound.

Charles Mace Supplee, Complainant, vs.
Wesley Supplee, Defendant.
Suit pending in Circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix, in Chancery.
In this cause it appearing from an affidavit, on file, that the defendant, Wesley Supplee, is a resident of the State of Michigan; that subpoena has been issued in said cause and been duly issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff of said county, for service and returned unserved; that said defendant resides out of said county, and is not found within the State of Michigan; and it further appearing from said affidavit, that said defendant ought to be made a party to said suit, because of the alleged absence of said Lewis W. Good Friends.

To see ourselves inherently, we are fain to borrow other men's eyes; wherein true friends are good informers, and enamours be bad friends.—Sir Thomas Browne.

Relieving Rheumatism.

Rheumatism can often be relieved by applications of the yellow juice of cloths wet in a weak solution of soda in water. If there is inflammation in the joints, the cure is very quick; the rash needs to be lukewarm.

Thirst for Novelties.

The curse of modern life—the thirst for the new, the rage to get out of the old ship—is the blight on our literature, our art, our drama, our manners and our morals. It is a passion without aim, or condition, or feeling—a mere restless itch to get free from old habits and to get into something unknown. It hardly matters what, if only it can measure itself as "novel" sensational.—Washington Times.

Teak Tree Grows Alone.

The teak tree (Tectona grandis) is found in Siam in the forests covering the spread of its own kind alone, but grows scattered among trees of many other species at an elevation not exceeding 2,500 feet, and prefers the hillsides and comparatively dry land in districts where the average annual rainfall does not exceed 50 inches.

Golden Weddings in Profusion.

SERMON FROM SHAKESPEARE

(Copyright 1909 by Rankin-Harrison Co. 1910.)

How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is
To have a thankless child.
King Lear, Act 1., Sc. 4.

The family is at this time of human society. An ideal state is merely a larger family. In the state a traitor is detested, abominated; in the family a thankless child corresponds to a selfish, self-seeking, faithless citizen. At times tales are told of children neglecting aged parents, turning them out of doors, treating them unpaid. Nothing creates greater loathing in the minds of men. The act is not either from the criminal, the thief or murderer, is more estimable.

If a man does never so slight a kindness to another, how gallant he is when he forces he has been rewarded with alms or wages. Think for a moment what parents are to children. Night and day through their child's infancy they have toiled and suffered for their little ones. With few exceptions each recent month passes without having to take thought for the morrow. The energy and self-sacrifice of their parents provide for them. They are protected from danger; they are enabled to go singing with childish glee through wood and meadow; they are paved for their life's work by tender hands which seek no reward save the success and happiness of their offspring. This self-sacrifice is tendered willingly and accepted in part as a matter-of-course way that few children realize just what they owe their parents.
